Not me – I changed my mind just now. If anything, I should just drive around in circles aimlessly because I need to get what's mine before there's none left. It makes a whole lot more sense than saving what we've got if people who have tons of money and who don't care about the environment are going to use it anyway. Then we'll all be screwed and not to mention stranded.

Devon Courtney is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dcourtne@student.umass.edu.

The Yak is back...
Join The Daily Collegian UMass Yak Back! on UVC-TV 19 on the Student Union steps Monday, May 12 for our second outdoor episode. It's going to be wilder than Boris over there.
...but because of its musky odor, it's gone outdoors.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, MAY 6, 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Shearwater and the Wailers to play Noho

Jon Meiburg talks about new album

BY BRIAN WOOD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

COURTESY MATADOR RECORDS

Shearwater plays the Iron Horse this Wednesday to introduce new material from their upcoming album, "Rook," which is scheduled for release on June 3.

Austin, Texas, is quickly becoming a hotbed for upcoming musical talent and a launching pad for a plethora of indie rock acts. At the forefront of this artistic movement is Jonathan Meiburg. Widely known for his contributions in the critically acclaimed Okkervil River, it's Meiburg's other band, Shearwater, that is currently generating quite a bit of attention.

On June 3 Shearwater release their latest album, "Rook," which can easily be described as the group's strongest and most far-reaching offering to date. On May 7 the first tour in support of the new album reaches the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton at 8:30 p.m.

In anticipation of the event, Meiburg spoke with The Massachusetts Daily Collegian via telephone, sharing his insight on touring, the creative process, and the excitement over the new album.

Brian Wood: I've always been fascinated by musicians who have the energy and drive to perform in multiple bands, especially when they offer such different sounds, such as the case with Shearwater and Okkervil River. What does playing and writing music in each band really offer you from a creative standpoint and how do they differ?

Jonathan Meiburg: I think it's a great exercise for your brain. There is a great pleasure in being in a side band and reinforcing someone else's songs and trying to figure out what you can do to make the song better, there is a lot of freedom in it. Whereas when you are writing your own songs there is a very different sort of energy or power to it that is also really exciting, but to me it really feels less free once you've written the song. Your path is really laid out for you as to what you are supposed to do. And there is also a great difference between being the person who is standing up front and is sort of being the focus of the show versus being on the side and not necessarily being that person. Both are fun in completely different ways.

BW: Since you have experienced both, do you prefer being the focal point of a performance or being off to the side supplementing it?

JM: Like I said, they are different. I just did a tour with Bill Callahan where I was just playing electric guitar for him. I hadn't played electric guitar in someone's band since I was like 16 years old, which was just a blast getting to do that again. With that being said, I feel like Shearwater has been getting better and better and I'm really enjoying the way the band is playing now and I'm really excited about this new record and the shows that go along with it.

BW: I was lucky enough to get an advanced copy of your latest album and personally, I believe it's your strongest effort to date. In your own words, how does "Rook" differ from some of your previous albums in your mind?

JM: Well, thank you very much. It's more focused and strangely more human to me in some ways. It's a little bit more restrained than the last record in some ways but I also felt like it was pure and deeper and has a wholeness and the sort of consistency and purpose to it that I'm really proud of.

BW: I know only the one single from the album has really been released so far, but what kind of response have you gotten so far from fans and music critics alike?

JM: We're in that nervous period right now where we're waiting to hear what people think, ya know? It seems to be really positive so far, a lot of people have told me they really like the record. A violinist who played on the record, I had finally gotten a copy to her the other day, she had just came in and played when we were in the middle of making it, didn't really have a sense of what it would be like when it was finished, and she was really really happy with how it turned out. And that meant as much as anything to me, ya know, someone who was in there while we were making saying it turned out a way that is satisfying.

BW: The first thing that really jumped out at me about your newest album is the artwork. Could you talk about what the significance of the image is and maybe how it was taken? It is really a remarkable visual.

JM: The image was created by these artists named Kahn & Selesnick. I saw a piece of their art in a magazine and I was just fascinated by it and got in touch with them and was astonished and delighted that they were interested in working with us. So I sent them the demos from the record and talked about some of the themes from it and pretty much left them on their own to come up with an image they felt reflected it. I was really happy with that one when I saw it, because it's so striking and beautiful but also kind of menacing and strange too.

BW: Matador Records seems to have a knack for putting out some wonderful releases, how's the partnership with them been so far since signing on?

JM: So far it's been wonderful, I have no complaints. This album is really the test to see how things go, but they are super intelligent and dynamic and interesting group of people, and I feel honored to be working with them. I feel like they really understand what we are going for with this record. They are almost pathological in not telling their artists what to do, so I didn't even play them anything from the record until it was finished, they had no idea. I was happy they liked it and they are really supportive.

BW: The Iron Horse is a rather intimate setting for live music. Do you feel this atmosphere lends itself to your music more than say playing a larger venue out here, like Pearl Street or the Calvin, ever would?

JM: Well, we've never played in Northampton before so I'm happy to play the Iron Horse. I'd say we go over fine in a small room or a big one. I feel like we have kind of a big sound but we're not tremendously loud or anything. We practice in quite a small room and we sound great in there (laughs). The most important thing at a show is if you really feel a connection with the audience and you can hear yourself well enough that you can hear the sound of your own voice and your instruments. If you got that, you're pretty much off to the races, big or small.

BW: Well I'm sure the Iron Horse will prove to be a positive atmosphere.

JM: We'll make some noise in there; it'll be a good time.

BW: I read that you are premiering the album in its entirety at your May 5 show in New York City, and once again in Austin on the 29th. How excited are you for those shows?

JM: It's the most elaborate thing I've ever been part of, I'm really excited about it. We're going to have a string quartet and the woodwinds and the harpist who played on the record so we'll really be able to play it as it is on the record, so I'm excited for that. It's almost more like putting on a play or a musical or something. I'm just thrilled that we get to play the record that way

BW: What kind of performance should people expect in Northampton?

JM: We're going to play a lot of stuff from the new record I think but also a lot from "Palo Santo" and "Winged Life."

BW: So a mixture of everything?

JM: Yeah. The New York show, I am trying to get ready for and I'm sort of nervous about it and I just want it to be right. It's like planning your wedding or something. We can let our hair down after that's over so you'll see a pretty happy group of people on stage.

Brian Wood can be reached at bjwood@student.umass.edu.

SHEARWATER

MAY 7

IRON HORSE MUSIC HALL

8:30 P.M.

$12 ADVANCE
$14 DOOR

Reggae band continues to keep Marley's legacy alive

BY NICK BUSH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Next week will mark the 27th anniversary of the death of the legendary Bob Marley; however, it seems his spirit and style have more influence than ever before. Marley's own reggae band, the Wailers, continue to carry the torch in his honor, and will perform this Wednesday at Pearl Street in Northampton.

Although the Wailers had existed in various forms since their creation in 1963, Bob Marley and his associates had little success outside of Jamaica until the early '70s. It was then that Bob first teamed up with Aston "Familyman" Barrett and his brother Carlton Barrett.

As Marley's musical director, Familyman was responsible for the unique sonic character of the Wailers, both on stage and in the studio. He recruited and trained all of the musicians that played on stage with Marley, from the horn players down to the backup singers.

The growth and success of Marley and the Wailers was obviously indebted to the high quality of their live performances, which were known to stir audiences into a wild frenzy, and even in some cases broker political peace during tumultuous times for Jamaica.

Familyman was also a groundbreaking bassist, contributing heavily to Marley's musical output during the time period of his most famous albums. Both the "Natty Dread" and "Burnin'" albums offer clear examples of his mastery of the reggae bass sound that has been echoed by hundreds of bands over the past few decades. His influence is obvious in the bass lines of not only artists like Eric Wilson of Sublime, but all the way to bassists such as Sting.

Upon Marley's death, Familyman and the Wailers soldiered on, continuing the legacy of their eminent frontman. While it would be impossible to ever replace the inimitable Marley, the current Wailers certainly pack a lot of positive energy into their performances.

Lead singer Elan Attias now joins Familyman on stage, channeling much of Bob's influential style. Despite the fact that other Wailers have departed for solo projects or the Great Beyond, it's clear that the quality of their performances is as high as ever.

The Wailers benefited from a rousingly successful set at the Langerado Festival in Florida in March, where Matisyahu joined them on stage to share a rendition of "No Woman, No Cry."

Now touring across America, the band is set to play at the Pearl Street Ballroom on Wednesday night. The Savannah, Georgia-based reggae-rock band Passafire will be opening the show. Doors open at 8:30 p.m. and tickets are $22.50 in advance, $25 at the door.

Nick Bush can be reached at nbush@student.umass.edu

THE WAILERS

MAY 7

PEARL STREET BALLROOM

8:30

$22.50 ADVANCE
$25 DOOR

Despite going their separate ways to record solo projects, the Wailers will come together again this Wednesday night at Pearl Street.

Iron Man proves to be one for the scrap heap

BY PETER RIZZO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Critics have been quick to pack on the praise for the summer's inaugural blockbuster, "Iron Man." Though it is likely to gross hundreds of millions at the box office with a sequel already in the works, many critics seem to be praising the movie for merely exceeding expectations.

LION'S GATE FILMS & MARVEL ENTERPRISES

Robert Downey Jr., in his suit of armor, is all to see in the film "Iron Man," that was released this past Friday.

For starters, Robert Downey Jr. is cast as Tony Spark, a billionaire who has inherited his father's company, Spark Industries, one of the world's premier weapons dealers.

From the first few scenes, we learn that Spark is in love with his own celebrity. He womanizes, claiming to have gone "12 for 12" with last year's Maxim cover models. He is reclusive, drinks, parties and in other words, they cast Robert Downey Jr. or at least the '90s version that did time.

Nevertheless, Downey Jr. does bring considerable vigor to the role but elsewhere there is less to compliment. Gwyneth Paltrow gets a side role as "Pepper" Pots, her first notable film role since 2004's "Sky Captain and the World of Tomorrow," and this film casts her in a similar menial role. Pots is Spark's personal assistant and potential love interest and Paltrow plays Pots well, bringing out the confliction between Pots' professional relationship with her boss and personal interest in his safety.

The biggest miscast of the movie is Jeff Bridges, known best to most college students as the Dude from 1998's cult classic "The Big Lebowski." Here he plays Obadiah Stane, Spark's business partner who arranges for our hero's kidnapping. Bridges is armed with a shaved head to look more evil, but despite the wardrobe, it's just hard to see him as a villain.

The kidnapping scenes begin the movie and are by far the highlight. Echoing modern events, we see Spark land in Afghanistan, where he is making rounds to American military personnel pimping his latest state of the art weaponry.

On the way back from this encounter, things take a turn for the worse. While chatting about his high-profile lifestyle with regular soldiers, their car blows up, leaving Spark injured and held captive by terrorists.

The terrorists give Spark a proposal: reproduce the weapon that his company was building or be killed. Liking neither option, Spark sets out to build the prototype Iron Man costume, which is a lot more bulking and less form-fitting than its latter model, seen in trailers.

Though it isn't the greatest fashion statement, it is enough for him to blast his way out of the compound and back to America, therefore effectively ending what might be the most entertaining part of the movie.

From here on out, the movie ceases to be topical and becomes far more comical. Product placements abound throughout the movie, and as the Ray's pizza boxes and Verizon cell phone shots pile up; it's easy to see the movie for what it really is – another poorly made Hollywood blockbuster, glossed over with enough explosions and visual effects for no one to care.

Downey Jr. does his best job and is exciting to watch, but sometimes it's just hard to believe the events. Upon his return from Afghanistan he confronts Stane about the Spark weaponry he saw in the hands of terrorists. Call me cynical buts its hard to believe that the head of Spark Industries would be unaware on any level that his company is double dealing goods to both America and its enemies.

The tacky plot line is an attempt by the movie to be topical when in fact it comes off as a clichéd excuse to show Tony Spark as Iron Man, fighting on behalf of America against the forces of greed and corporatism.

Ironically, it's the same forces that seem to be the motivation behind this movie.

Some of the special effects are exciting, but all in all, it's nothing that you haven't seen before if you saw any of last summer's superhero movies. Downey Jr.'s acting ability aside, it's still not enough to carry the movie once he's behind the emotionless mask of the superhero Iron Man.

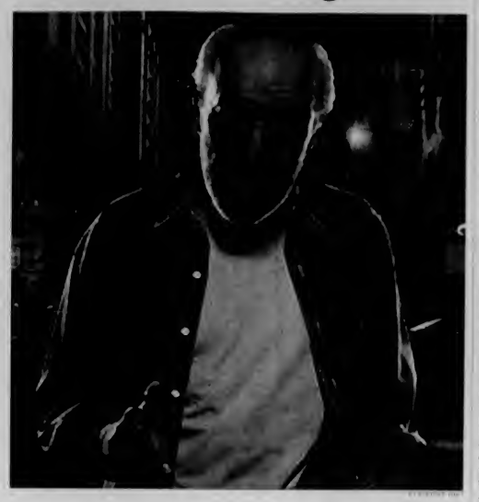
Once the actors get out of their own skin and dawn the mechanical suits the movie losses all of its soul. Let's face it, Iron Man was never that great of a superhero to begin with – his whole billionaire with a heart of gold shtick? So Batman. Iron Man isn't even interesting enough to make in the top five best X-Men characters, with superpowers that consist of basically flying and shooting energy bursts out of his hands.

Is "Iron Man" fun? You bet. However, it's undoubtedly not something that is going to make the stacks of your future DVD collection like its 94 percent rating on Rotten Tomatoes would have you believe.

At best Iron Man is a solid superhero movie that appeals to every crowd. It gives the average movie fan a chance to see things blow up and eat popcorn for a few hours and the critics a chance to see some good actors excel in a more traditional Hollywood role. It's just mediocre enough to satisfy both camps, but in the end, should this level of mediocrity really satisfy us?

Pete Rizzo can be reached at prizzo@student.umass.edu.

"IRON MAN"



STARRING: ROBERT DOWNEY JR., TERRENCE HOWARD AND JEFF BRIDGES

C+

Comedian offers nothing new

Carlin show mimics latest HBO special

BY RYAN MCASKILL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Carlin made his way to Northampton's Calvin Theatre this past Friday evening, performing a well-recieved routine of religion and politics.

On Friday night Northampton became a little more cynical as stand-up legend George Carlin performed two shows at the Calvin Theater.

Opening for Carlin was Brad Zimmerman. The New York-based stand-up came on stage to a mixed reaction as the crowd was expecting Carlin. Despite the somewhat hostile reaction, Zimmerman was able to win over the crowd, even getting a backstage proposal from a female audience member.

Zimmerman opened by talking about being a struggling actor and being a waiter.

"I work as a waiter and have for a very long time, certainly much longer than can be considered understandable. Somewhere between 15 and 18 years ago the job lost its freshness for me. So now it's not one of those things I do and place a premium on being the best. I go to work essentially to leave."

He went on to touch on topics like having a boring life, exercising so he doesn't look the way he feels and dating. He ended with his top-six list of things to say to get out of a blind date if you know right away that it's not going to work.

"Number six: Surprise! I got you your own table. Number five: On the way to the bathroom I met somebody. Number four: I know we just sat down, but I want to go home. Number 3: I'll be right back. Number two: Tell the truth, if you were in my shoes would you stay? Number one: Let's take a walk, you go that way."

Zimmerman was a good opener for Carlin as they share similar styles and personalities.

Following his 30-minute set was a 15-minute intermission in which Carlin merchandise, including books, CDs, posters and three T-shirts with slogans like "Jesus is coming, look busy" and "Simon says, go f yourself."

With souvenirs bought, the lights dimmed and Carlin came on stage to a rousing ovation.

"I'd like to start by saying f Lance Armstrong."

From there Carlin ran through all his usual targets, including the government, politics and humanity in general in his usual crass and vulgar manner.

His latest tour is centered around "cutting through the bullshit. It's all bullshit, folks, and its all bad for ya," he said.

He touched on numerous kinds of "bullshit" throughout the night.

Child worship: "It's a special kind of bullshit that has taken hold in this country in the last 30 to 40 years that can only be called child worship. This excessive devotion to children. These professional parents, these obsessive dipper sniffers who are over-scheduling and over-managing their children and robbing them of a childhood.

"Even the act of play is scheduled in the form of play dates. Something that is supposed to be spontaneous and free is now being rigidly planned. When does a kid get to sit in the yard with a stick anymore? You know, just sit with a f stick. Do today's kids even know what a stick is? You know just sit with a f stick and dig a f hole."

Being old: "Don't be afraid to get old, it's a great time of life, you get to take advantage of people and you're not responsible for anything. You can even s in your pants. They expect it. I haven't tried that yet but I don't rule it out."

As usual, Carlin saved his favorite targets, religion and government, for last.

On the Bible: "Let's get back to the Bible, America's favorite national theatrical prop."

On rights: "There are no such things as rights, they're imaginary. We made them up like the boogieman. They are an idea, a cute idea, but they're fictional. I ask you where they came from, and people say, 'They're a God-given right,' ah f, here we go again.'"

"I believe we should have unlimited rights. I believe I have the right to do anything I please, and if I do something you don't like, I believe you have the right to kill me. The next time someone says 'I have the right to my opinion,' you say, 'I have the right to my opinion and my opinion is you have no right to your opinion.' Then shoot the f and walk away."

Carlin does come off as preachy at times and his message is met by applause during the set-ups, whether warranted or not, and can be come distracting.

Carlin hails from the school of comedy where every word in every joke is structured just so. Because of this, there is little to no change from show to show on a given tour.

Some may have been disappointed, as Carlin's set was his latest HBO special almost word for word. Even with the familiarity of the routines, every punch line was met with laughter and applause.

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskil@dailycollegian.com.

Oddball Deacon brings the dance

BY IAN NELSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Thursday night the Pearl Street Clubroom became a sweaty mass of bouncing bodies as Dan Deacon brought his high-pitched brand of nearly danceable oddball electronics to the Pioneer Valley.

Before Deacon began his set full of audience participation games, openers Eric Hnatow and Future Islands each provided a set.

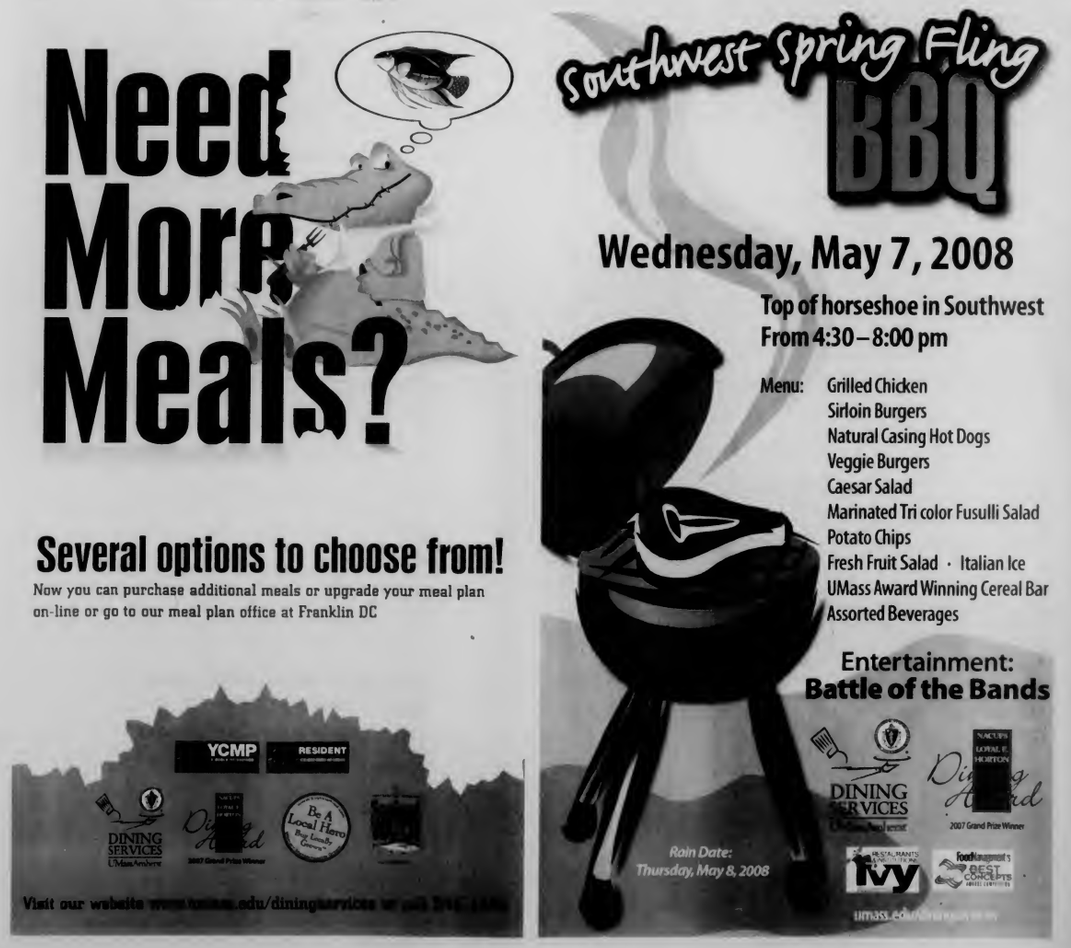
Northampton's own Hnatow began the night with a loud set of heavy dance beats amid spasms of fractured noise and ambience. With his table of samplers and other electronics on the floor, a bearded Hnatow got the crowd into his programmed rhythms by jumping through the sparse audience, falling on people and the floor, even running a lap around the perimeter of the club.

Next up was Future Islands, a Baltimore new wave-influenced quartet with a wide-eyed, bizarre front man. The guitar-less four-piece rollicked through a set of fairly similar pop songs, with the focus on the tattered flannel-clad singer, dramatically gesturing this way and that. He gave off an air similar to the goofy antics of Tenacious D's Jack Black, contorting his round face and sneering emotions.

Finally Dan Deacon's turn was up, the audience crowding around his rickety table of neon-taped knobs, samplers, vocal manipulators and, of course, his iconic glowing green skull. He prepared the audience for the set with an intricate regimen of stretches, pointing skywards before taking a knee and staring a stranger in the eye. Finally before the music began he demanded a countdown from the crowd, from 10 to zero (not one), ringing in the first song, the raucous "Okie Dokie."

With concertgoers already beginning to sweat, along came the next single, "The Crystal Cat," one of his more danceable numbers. The vocal pitch upped, making Deacon sound like a meowing feline as on the recorded version from last year's "Spiderman of the Rings" full-length.

The middle of the set was composed of a bunch of new material as well as seemingly random dance beats to provide a backing for Deacon's fun and games. The first audience activity was a classic dance-off. He prodded the crowd to spread out to the edges of the club and he divided everyone into two groups. He then chose two captains to get the contest started, with each of then busting out a few moves before passing it on to another member of their side.



After this adventure, Deacon proceeded to conduct the crowd into a series of tunnels in the vein of London Bridge. Fans would dance through the extended tunnel and prolonged it, wrapping around the entire venue. This activity spanned a surprisingly long time, with everyone actually following directions and working together to make it last.

Finally, Deacon announced that he had two more songs before the end of the night, the first of which was the entirely audience-assisted "Silence Like the Wind." The song apparently succeeds entirely in the Deacon-insructed formula of gestures that accompany the song. One must raise one's hand in a "barking" motion to the sky after blowing a kiss, then grab a kiss, throw it to the ground and either stomp on it or pocket it. The song eventually breaks into a rousing slew of electronic squalls, only giving way to more choruses of "silence like the wind overtakes me."

The final song was the ultimate Dan Deacon track, the 12-minute epic "Wham City," which seemed to last longer than usual. The green skull flashed its strobe light within, shining on the small crowd onstage hovering over the equipment table. The song was riddled by audience members crowd surfing, falling over each other and nearly onto Deacon himself. Towards the end of the song, the music dropped out, leaving nothing but a chorus of chanting concertgoers.

Not many acts bring such a euphoric vibe to their live shows, calling the audience to action while busting out crowd favorities. For a moment, Dan Deacon brought the tight-knit community feel of the Wham City collective to Pearl Street, using his superior approachability to bring people together for body heat, sweat and unabashed fun.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu

Celtics set for second round

JIMMY GOLEN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WALTHAM, Mass. (AP)— Doc Rivers got a chance to see another side of LeBron James in February, when the Celtics coach was running the Eastern Conference All-Star team and the Cavaliers forward was winning the game's MVP award for the second time.

It wasn't the shooting: Rivers has seen James score 30 points just about every time he's played Boston. Or the rebounding that led Rivers to dub James "Shaq-at-guard." Or the passing the coach compared to a Nolan Ryan fastball. .

"His focus in the timeouts," Rivers said after practice on Monday. "It actually caught me off guard. His eyes were like beaming at me. You don't see that often. Especially not at the All-Star game."

Rivers will have to watch James work from the other bench on Tuesday night when Cleveland comes to Boston for Game 1 of their second-round playoff series. Unfortunately, he didn't pick anything up while coaching James that will help him coach against him.

"I wish," Rivers said with a laugh. "As a matter of fact, I saw things the other way."

Before being held to a mere 26 points in their final regular-season matchup, James scored 30 or more in nine straight games against the Celtics – something only Wilt Chamberlain can match. Seven of those performances came before Boston put together its Big Three, though.

In three games this season, James averaged 32 points, seven rebounds and just under 10 assists.

"You've always got to keep an eye on him wherever he is on the court," said Paul Pierce, who will be primarily responsible for guarding the person he called "arguably the best player in the NBA."

"I'm not trying to turn this into a one-on-one. I know that I don't have to get 35 points and 15 rebounds for us to win."

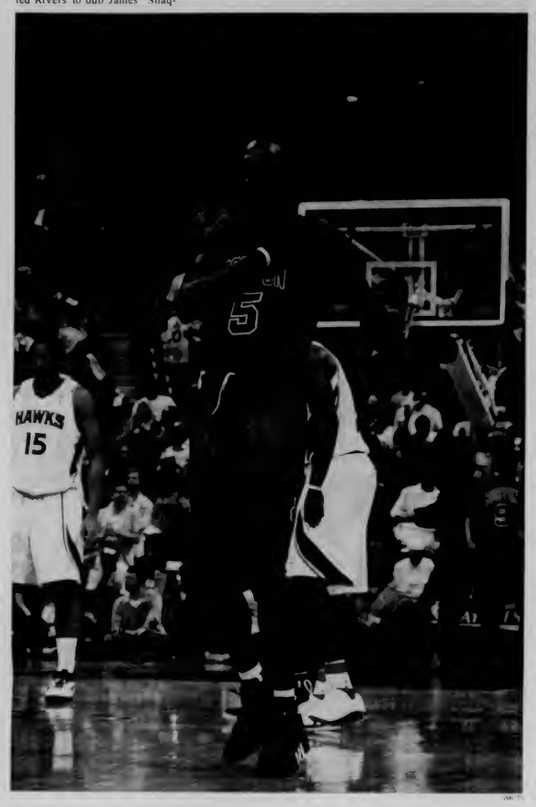
That's because while Cleveland is largely LeBron and his supporting cast, the Celtics can boast three legitimate stars in Pierce, Kevin Garnett and Ray Allen. Pierce and Allen also joined James at the All-Star game; Garnett sat out with an abdominal strain after finishing first in the NBA in fan voting.

Allen obviously enjoyed being James' teammate: The Celtics guard scored a game-high 28 points and made three straight 3-pointers in the last 3:15 to lead the East to victory.

What did he learn from playing with James?

"If I'd taken two more shots," Allen said with a smile, "I probably would have won the MVP."

Boston plays lip service to worrying about the rest of the Cavaliers, but Cleveland really has to spread its defense to cover the three All-Stars.



"I think with [Garnett], Ray and Paul, they feel like it's their time," Cavaliers center Zydrunas Ilgauskas said. "They had such a great regular season and they feel like this is their shot at winning it all. Because the longer you stay in the league, you realize how few and far between they are. They feel like this is their year."

The Celtics won an NBA-best 66 games in the regular season, then needed seven games to put away the upstart Atlanta Hawks in the first round. Cleveland needed six games to dispatch the Washington Wizards in the first round, winning the clincher when James scored 27 with 13 rebounds and 13 assists.

The Celtics and Cavaliers split their four games this season, with James and Garnett each sitting one out. Both teams won both games at home – a bad sign for Cleveland, which would have to win at least one in Boston to advance.

Although they couldn't beat Boston, the Hawks did give the Cavaliers some hope.

"They kind of had that arrogance about them all season by winning so many games that you were kind of not wanting to face them," Cavaliers guard Devin Brown said after practice on Monday. "But after seeing what we saw, I think we're ready to go."

Cleveland will travel to Boston for Game 1 for the second-round of the playoffs. Kevin Garnett and the Celtics won an NBA-best 66 games during the regular season.

Minutemen in running for last A-10 spot weekend by the standards he's set this season. Coming into the weekend he was batting .403, but that dropped 25 points after he endured a 2-for-14 weekend.

BASEBALL from page 8

The sophomore's first hit came in that ninth inning on Sunday, and it proved one of his most important of the season. Peter Copa scored from second on the single and that tied the game at three.

UMass found itself down a run again in the bottom of the 12th but Jim Macdonald extended the game with an RBI double that scored Baudinet.

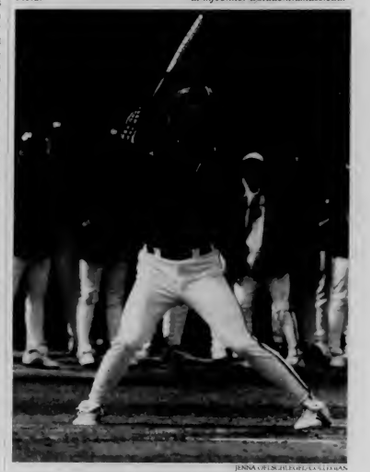
Macdonald figured into the equation again in the 15th when he scored the game-winning run off an Andy Tuetken single – the game lasted nearly four hours (3:58).

GAME DAY CHANGED

The Minutemen's game against Northeastern was originally scheduled for tomorrow but has been moved to today at 3 p.m. It will still be played at Earl Lorden Field.

The Huskies also won two-of-three games this past weekend and just like UMass, they won the final two games of the series.

NU (19-22-1, 9-14-1 Colonial Athletic Association) has had a very similar season to the Minutemen. Both teams are slightly under .500 in their respective conferences and both also share similar offensive and defensive statistics.



One player the Minutemen pitching staff will have to be wary of is catcher Frank Pesanello. The catcher doesn't hold a stellar batting average or on-base percentage (.248 and 296, respectively) but when he makes contact, the ball travels.

He tied Northeastern's single-season record for home runs this weekend, when he hit his 15th home run against Hofstra.

Mike Lyon also could provide problems. He's batting .361 this season and has a lot of pop in his bat for a shortstop.

Lyon's hit 12 home runs and leads the team with 39 RBI and a .699 slugging percentage.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

Jim Macdonald scored the game-winning run in the 15-inning victory against Dayton on Sunday at Earl Lorden Field.

Charlotte takes third in A-10

SOFTBALL from page 8

little hope of attaining the No. 2 spot in the Atlantic 10. The 49ers (32-28, 12-9 A-10) needed to sweep their Sunday doubleheader with Saint Joseph's and have St. Bonaventure to lose both games to Massachusetts. The Bonnies held their end of the bargain, but Charlotte lost to St. Joe's to end any hopes of that.

However, with both teams holding an 11-9 A-10 record, the third seed in the tournament was very much at stake. Saint Joseph's, which has not had an A-10 tournament berth since 2005, needed the sweep after splitting its last two series against George Washington and Fordham. Charlotte, which is hosting the conference tournament, was attempting to get the top seed for the first round of play at its home field.

The 49ers eventually took the third spot after a 2-0 shutout to close out their regular season. After putting up two runs in the third, Charlotte rode sophomore Emily Jeffery's six shutout innings for the win. With the loss, Saint Joseph's falls to the fifth seed in the tournament and will face fourth-seeded Fordham. Charlotte will face sixth-seeded Saint Louis.

FORDHAM FALLS SHORT

Just to show how close the race was at the end of the Atlantic 10 regular season; Fordham, St. Bonaventure and Charlotte all chances to secure the No. 2 seed in the A-10 tournament. The Rams (33-28, 11-9 A-10) could have taken the second spot with two wins in the series but couldn't get past La Salle (22-44, 8-10 A-10).

Fordham's offense failed to get any production in the first game as the Rams were shut out in a three-hit effort by La Salle starter Laura Beth McCreesh. The second game, however, proved to be much closer and provided a chance for the Rams to make a stellar comeback.

Down 4-1 in the top of the seventh, Rams center fielder Melissa Andrews hit a two-run home run to bring Fordham to within one. However, after a single by Allison Twarowski, Mary Beth Puccio grounded out to end the game.

With its two wins on Sunday, La Salle ended its season on a positive note and finishes with the eighth-best record in the conference.

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

UMass falls to Bison

CREW from page 8

The most successful boat on the day for the Maroon and White was the Second Varsity 8, taking the team's lone silver medal. Again the Minutewomen finished the day where they were projected to finish at the beginning of the day.

After finishing second in the first round to Buffalo (6:56.525), UMass (6:58.974) made significant improvement on their time in the Grand Final. The Minutewomen shaved more than seven seconds off of their first round time to complete the Grand Final in 6:51.578.

Despite the improvement on their time, the Minutewomen took second behind Bucknell (6:50.391). UMass led the race for its majority only to fall to the Bison in the last quarter of the race. Bucknell improved its first round time by almost 15 seconds to overcome the Minutewomen.

"We had the lead for three quarters of the race over Bucknell," UMass assistant coach Pat Tynan said. "I don't think we we're expecting to be ahead of them at the half."

The rest of the Grand Final race was rounded out by Buffalo (6:54.817) taking third, followed by URI (6:54.877), Rutgers (6.59.136) and George Mason (7:01.363).

The only UMass boat that did not finish where they were seeded at the beginning of the day was the Novice 8. Coming in to the race after a strong win over Northeastern, the Minutewomen's Novice 8 had earned the No. 1 seeding.

UMass (7:23.719) took first in its heat during the first round but only third overall behind Rutgers (7:20.332) and Buffalo (7:23.616).

The Grand Final saw the Minutewomen (7:13.404) finish third again, despite an improvement of more than 10 seconds on their first round time. URI (7:07.851) took home the gold due to its improvement of more than 17 seconds. Rutgers (7:10.065) improved its time by 10 seconds to edge UMass for the silver.

The last race the Minutewomen took part in was the Varsity 4. UMass entered in two boats in the race just as URI, Bucknell and Rutgers did. The UMass "A" boat (8:17.873) had the No. 5 seed coming into the day's action and took fifth in the Grand Final. The "B" boat finished ninth overall in the first round and therefore raced in the Petite Final.

The "B" boat (8:14.056) took third in the Petite Final and ninth overall, despite having a time that was more than three seconds faster than the Minutewomen's "A" boat in the Grand Final.

UMass will head to Philadelphia this weekend to race in the 70th Annual Dad Vail Regatta. The regatta is the largest collegiate regatta in the United States and will feature over 100 colleges from the United States and Canada. The races begin on Friday and will conclude on Saturday.

Jeff R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu.

Butterfly
Chinese & Japanese Restaurant
Free Delivery
(413) 585-8989
Vegetarian Menu Available
We have a full liquor license!
Mon-Thurs 11:30am-10:00pm
Fri & Sat 11:30am-11:00pm
Sunday 12:00 noon-10:00pm
45 Russell St(Rt. 9) Hadley, MA 01035
WWW.BUTTERFLYHADLEY.COM

Good with computers? Need Experience? Apply here!

The Daily Collegian is now hiring a Web Manager for the '08-'09 school year.

Primary duties include:
- Maintaining the Daily Collegian's website
- Placing online ads
- Supervising up to four web editors.

Training will be provided.

Required Skills:
- Comfortable with computers and general internet practices
- Thorough understanding of HTML and CSS
- Some knowledge of FTP or other file transfer protocols
- Some graphic knowledge and ability to work with the Adobe CS2/CS3 suite.

For more information, contact James Hale at jhale@dailycollegian.com or come down to the Collegian office in the Campus Center basement.

"Hi, my name is James. Do you want to date me? Take me to dinner or rub your fingers through my hair. I speak three languages and I can run fast. I like to ride bikes and play drums. Serious suitors only! comics@dailycollegian.com"

Admit it, you like Canada.

			8
9				4		7	6
	6	2	5			9		3
2	4
		7	1		2	6
							4	7
7		9			5	8	6
3	1		8					5
				7

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Mel of Cooperstown
4 Swindle
8 Smear or blur
14 Expected
15 Asta's mistress
16 Echo location?
17 Blunder
18 Roman poet
19 Beginnings
20 Scattered
22 Pleasingly pretty
23 Untidy
24 Military quarters
28 Eagle's nest
29 Rocky peak
30 Hilo hello
31 Reddish grape
34 Extend across
35 Blockhead
38 Brother or sister
40 Conclusion
41 Colorado ski resort
43 Piece of helpful advice
45 Church instrument
47 Small bill
48 Fat cat
52 Canadian city or lake
54 Market anew
55 Ticked (off)
56 Gangland hitman
57 Feature
60 Arizona city
61 Can metal
62 Domesticated polecat
63 U.K. chap
64 Guided
65 Very small
66 Green Gables girl
67 Wind dir

DOWN
1 Black Sea port
2 Shell resident
3 Intense fear
4 Chinese vegetables
5 Flock of partridge
6 Parched
7 Wacko
8 Scrub hard
9 Om. e.g.
10 Opens, as a letter
11 Hair colorer
12 Obtained
13 USNA grad
21 Heroic saga
22 Lightweight short-barreled rifle
24 Tenpins or candlepins
25 Deal with difficulties
26 Top Tatar
27 Hourglass fill
29 Prohibited
32 Useful hint
33 Hill-dwelling insect
35 Declare openly
36 Bombay wrap
37 Communicate silently
39 Bring into existence
42 Portable lamp
44 Coarse file
46 Family members
49 Retro VW
50 Golden tunes
51 Hair color
53 Of little importance
54 Violin bow application
56 Gulf relative
57 Sternward
58 Meet with 59 Vent opener?
60 Wharton deg

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

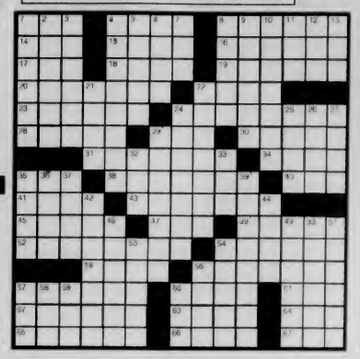
QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Never play cards with a man called Doc. Never eat at a place called Mom's. Never sleep with a woman whose troubles are worse than your own."

— Nelson Algren

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK BY KID SHAY

WONDERMARK BY DAVID MALKI



LABRAT BY RICHARD MARTELLY

CAPTION CONTEST!

Submit captions and see the picture in color at:
www.dailycollegian.com/caption

Submit your comics!
comics@dailycollegian.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Paninis are the Macintosh laptops of the sandwich community.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Animal shelters are most likely very sick of dyslexic people trying to adopt divine canines.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Dropping acid in your lab might be more dangerous than dropping acid in your friend's dorm room.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
If you actually take sexual guidance from the phrase "the birds and the bees," you're gonna end up doing a horse or something.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Stop saying up so late. Free porn is not worth the sleep deprivation.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Admit it, you put the regular condoms into the grey magnum box before you go up to the counter.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Beauty is in the eye of the beholder, but if you plan on dating Stevie Wonder be prepared to put your tongue inside his ear.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
There is a very tall man giving tours on this campus. Pelt him with fruit.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
You have increased your capacity for compassion. It's time to revisit "A Walk to Remember."

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Don't waste your time going after a hot mom with Jif in her shopping cart. She is too choosey to shell your peanut.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Ask your favorite interior decorator if the carpet matches the drapes. How she interprets that is her call.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
A good friend offers to shave the back of even his furriest friends.

Submit free personals to...

comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENT

Meeting Notice
Top of Campus, Incorporated (TOC, Inc.) will hold its Annual Meeting in Campus Center 802, Wednesday, May 28, 2008 at 12:00 p.m.

APT FOR RENT

Cliffside Apartments. 2 Bedroom apt for sublet/ rent beginning June 1st. $915/mo. ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED. Directly on bus route. Contact: rploof@student.umass.edu

6/1. 2 bedroom, free couch, recliner, cables, bedframes. $1100/mo. Contact: gware@student.umass.edu

Center of Town. 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

APT FOR RENT

Townhouse #32 for rent. Lease starting June 1st. Right near bus stop. Partially furnished. New appliances installed. New kitchen floor, 3 bedroom. 1.5 bathroom. $1500 a month. contact dexter@student.umass.edu

For 9/1/08. Northampton. 2 Bedrooms $825+ 3 Bedrooms $1025+ 4 Bedrooms $1225+ 6 Bedrooms $1500+ 584-4920 or 253-7436

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandy-wineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

AMHERST, Mill Valley Estates 2 bedroom $1175, 3 bedroom $1475, 4 bedroom $2225 includes heat/hot water, air, washer/dryer hookups, dishwasher and 2 full baths. FINAL CHANCE to get $1000 off your move-in for June 1st through Sept 1st! Call now 413-253-7377, email: millvalleyestates@winnco.com

Townhouse Apt. 49 for rent $1500 a month lease starts 6/1 Contact Rmelvill@student.umass.edu

Subletting Puffton for the Summer! Ax about me! 508-335-0seven7seven Pretty cheap.

EMPLOYMENT

Drivers WANTED apply at D.P. Dough downtown Amherst.

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available immediately. Only those able to work the upcoming summer should apply. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call 413-584-4746 or nfo@idealmovers.com

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

As part of our expansion program, our company is looking for part time Work from home account managers and sales representatives, it pays $500 a month plus benefits and takes only little of your time. Please contact us for more details. Requirements-should be a computer literate. 2-3 hours access to the internet weekly. Must be over 19yrs of age. Must be efficient and dedicated. If you are interested and need more information, Contact Dan Frank, (dan.frank39@yahoo.com)

FOR SALE

Twin bed (brand new), computer desk & chair, dresser. Each can be sold individually or in a package. Email for more info: dexter@student.umass.edu

GENERAL

INK & TONER CARTRIDGES 30-60% LESS ECO-FRIENDLY AMHERST 413-548-9905 NORTHAMPTON 413-517-0099

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 Bedroom+ newer home, 2 full baths, laundry hook-ups, large yard, close to UMass Contact (413) 549-4270

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test.233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, MAY 6, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UM wins two medals

Second Varsity 8 takes silver at ECACs

By Jeff R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

This weekend at the Eastern College Athletic Conference Championship the Massachusetts rowing team failed to duplicate the three silver medal performance they had last year.

Instead, the team came home after Sunday's race with a silver and bronze medal. Overall, the Minutewomen's performance resembled what they were projected to do. Three of the of UMass's five boats that raced, finished where they were ranked at the start of the regatta.

The Grand Final for the Varsity 8 boats finished just as they were projected. Bucknell (6 minutes, 37.178 seconds) took first, followed by Buffalo (6:40.879), Rhode Island (6:42.693) and UMass (6:50.019). Rutgers (6:52.930) and Colgate (7:04.114) rounded out the rest of the Grand Final.

Of the top four boats, the Minutewomen were the only boat that did not improve on their time from the first round. UMass's time slipped not even a second, but with the other three top boats all improving by more than a second and a half, it can make a difference in a race. Bucknell improved its time the most, by more than seven seconds, while URI rowed faster by five seconds.

See CREW on page 6

The Minutewomen won a silver and bronze medal at the ECAC Championships Sunday. Last year, UMass had three silver medals in a more successful performance.

Two weekend series left for Minutemen

Baudinet, Macdonald sparking offense, team in stretch drive

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

In order to qualify for the Atlantic 10 Tournament, the Massachusetts baseball team most likely had to win its three remaining conference series on the schedule.

It still has work to do but got off to a good start this weekend, taking the latter two games of a three-game set against Dayton.

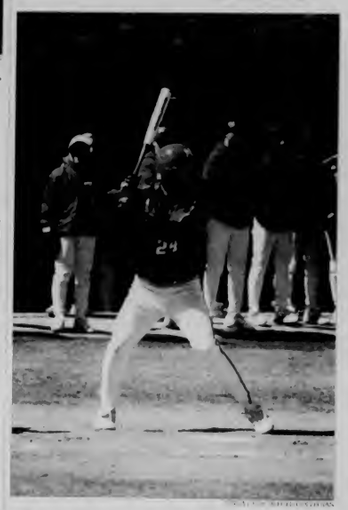
Winning the final two games of these series is becoming familiar to the Minutemen. They did it on the road last weekend against Saint Joseph's and then matched it this weekend.

UMass (16-21, 9-12 A-10) is now 1.5 games behind St. Bonaventure for the the sixth and final spot in the conference tournament. It still has two weekend series to play against Rhode Island and Fordham, who are both ahead of the Minutemen.

URI (fourth place) helped its cause in the A-10 standings in its weekend sweep of St. Joe's, while Fordham dropped two of three and sits in a three-way tie for seventh in the conference with Dayton and George Washington.

The Minutemen are capable of winning both these remaining series to elevate themselves into the conference tournament but have to play more consistent baseball if they hope to do so.

Timely hitting



On Sunday, it twice appeared that UMass would drop the final game against Dayton and virtually play themselves out of sight of the A-10 Tournament.

There wasn't too much offense in the Minutemen's 5-4 victory but the team got hits when they needed to and delivered a walk-off single in the 15th inning.

However, if not for a Brian Baudinet RBI single in the ninth inning, the game never would have gone to extras.

Baudinet didn't have a great

See BASEBALL on page 6

Sophomore Brian Baudinet hit an RBI single to send the Minutemen into extra innings in the 5-4 win against Dayton on Sunday.

A-10 field set for weekend

Brandice Balschmiter was named A-10 Pitcher of the Week after a 2-0 week against Saint Bonaventure and Boston College.

Bonnies earn second seed, highest in program history

By Nick O'Malley
Collegian Staff

After experiencing an 11-0 mercy rule thumping to Massachusetts earlier in the day, St. Bonaventure seemed to be in a position to play its way into the No. 2 slot of the Atlantic 10 Tournament later this week. UMass, however, had different plans.

The Minutewomen (35-11, 20-0 A-10) came back from a 1-0 deficit in the top of the seventh inning with sophomore Carly Normandin's two out two-run double off of St. Bonaventure sophomore Sherri Thompson.

St. Bonaventure, however, still clinched the second seed and first-round bye in the tournament despite having one fewer loss than third seeded Charlotte, who split the two-game set with Saint Joseph's. The Bonnies (20-22, 11-9 A-10) had a doubleheader against George Washington rained out and ended up playing two fewer conference games than the rest of the A-10.

After winning four out its last six conference games, by a combined score of 28-6, St. Bonaventure was limited to only one run in two games by the Massachusetts pitching staff. The first game shutout also included UMass junior Brandice Balschmiter's fifth no-hitter of the season.

With the best record in the conference, UMass earns the No. 1 seed and gets a first-round bye, along with St. Bonaventure as the second seed.

Series split

By losing two games to Temple in as many days, Charlotte had

See SOFTBALL on page 6

Community objects, Hobart moves back to Division I

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

On April 26, the Board of Trustees at Hobart decided that it would leave the ECAC and reclassify to Division III for men's collegiate lacrosse.

The reclassification was because of the "changing landscape of collegiate lacrosse and the challenges inherent in recruiting talented student athletes at the Division I level without athletic scholarships," according to the program's Web site.

But after alumni, parents and members of the lacrosse community expressed their resentment at the decision to change leagues, the committee decided on May 1 that it will remain a Division I program.

The Statesmen (8-6, 4-3 ECAC) won 12 consecutive Division III national championships from 1980 to 1991, before moving up to Division I in 1995. The program has been part of lacrosse for over 100 years, and heard the news that day after upsetting Loyola, 10-6.

The news of moving down to DIII and then staying at the DI level brought about an emotional week for Hobart, but it was clearly outmatched against instate rival No. 8 Cornell.

Hobart was defeated in its regular season finale, losing to the Big Red in collegiate lacrosse's oldest rivalry.

It was the 130th meeting of both teams, dating back to 1896. The game was the first night contest in the program's history, as it was held at Boswell Field with portable lights.

The win solidified Cornell's chances of an at-large bid for the national tourney, as it received an eighth seed and will be the only team representing the Ivy League this year, after defeating Brown in a head-to-head tiebreaker.

One in, seven out

Tough losses and inconsistent play by all the teams in the Eastern College Athletic Conference this season categorized a league that was particularly weak, but the conference will be represented in the 2008 Division I NCAA Lacrosse Tournament.

The men's bracket was revealed last Sunday, as No. 17 Loyola was the only ECAC team competing in the annual contest.

No. 10 Georgetown, an elite program that has dominated the ECAC and collegiate lacrosse, did not make the tournament for the first time since joining the conference.

The Hoyas, (9-4, 5-2 ECAC) have won five ECAC Championships since 2000, including sharing the title in 2001 and 2005, while participating in the NCAA Tournament every year since 2001.

After suffering a season finale one-goal defeat at the hands of Penn State, No. 18 Denver took the stunned Hoyas bid with qualitiy wins against tough opponents like No. 6 Notre Dame and No. 13 Brown, as well as playing a stronger schedule.

The Greyhounds (7-6, 6-1 ECAC) are the conference's automatic qualifier, winning the season title back on April 19 against Fairfield.

No. 17 Loyola was the ECAC automatic qualifier and is the only ECAC team to move on to the NCAA Tournament.

This is the programs 16th tournament appearance, and its first back-to-back appearance since the 2000 and 2001 seasons.

Last year, the Greyhounds fell in the first round to Albany, 19-10, a fifth-seeded team with a high-powered offense. Loyola was unsuccessful at playing catch-up, and hope that this year's postseason run will be more successful.

The Greyhounds will face Duke in a nationally televised first-round matchup on May 10. The Blue Devils (16-1, 4-0 ACC) are the best team in the nation and the No. 1 seed in the tournament.

Back on March 8, visiting Duke crushed Loyola on its way to a 21-8 victory in front of a nationally televised audience. The Blue Devils handed the Greyhounds their worst loss since the 1995 NCAA Tournament and snapped a two-game losing streak, dominating in the open field as well as in settled offensive situations.

GWLL makes history

No. 11 Ohio State received a sixth-seed to the tournament, while the Pioneers (10-6, 4-1 GWLL) and Fighting Irish (13-2, 4-1 GWLL) will also represent the Great Western Lacrosse League in the NCAA's for the first time in the conference's 15-year history.

Denver got an at-large bid, even though it fell to OSU in the semifinals of the inaugural GWLL Tournament. Each team split the regular season title, while all made the national tournament.

The Buckeyes (10-5, 4-1 GWLL) face the Big Red on May 10, while Denver will play seventh-seeded Maryland. Notre Dame, who received the automatic bid after winning the conference tournament, will go up against No. 12 Colgate.

DU lost to the Terps in its first tournament appearance back in 2006, 16-8.

This is the third tournament appearance for the Buckeyes, who have made it back-to-back in the 2003 and 2004 campaigns.

The Fighting Irish will host an NCAA Tournament game for the first time in the program's 28-year history when the Red Raiders go to South Bend. The team will be in the tournament for the third consecutive year and the 13th time in program history. It will be the second meeting between the two teams, the first coming in 1987, with ND defeating Colgate, 11-10. The Raiders won the Patriot League Championship, and will be playing in the program's first ever NCAA Tournament game.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

INSIDE: FESTIVAL OF ARTS BEGINS THURSDAY | PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 76 LO: 54 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, MAY 7, 2008

People's Party truck stops at UMass | Page 5

People's Party, a mobile band that plays off of a truck bought from Craigslist.org stopped at UMass to play a free, spontanious concert for students.

Sharing his knowledge:

Journalism Dept.'s Ralph Whitehead sets example for UMass students

By John Banelis
Collegian Correspondent

Journalism professor Ralph Whitehead is more interested in pop culture and politics than the average University of Massachusetts student. Whitehead knows more about the aforementioned subjects then virtually every student at the university.

Whitehead, who has been teaching journalism at UMass for 35 years, began his career in Newark, N.J. as a political reporter. He then took a job as a reporter in Chicago, his home town, then as a campaign press secretary and eventually as an advisor for the former Secretary of Labor.

Whitehead was born in Chicago in 1943, where he lived until seventh grade. His interest in politics started at an early age, as his grandfather, George T. Donahue, ran Chicago Parks District for 25 years and was also friends with Edward J. Kelly, the future mayor of Chicago. When Whitehead's father, Ralph Whitehead, Sr.'s job was transferred to Wisconsin, the family moved to the town of Appleton. Whitehead remained in Wisconsin to attend Lawrence College and a year of graduate school at the University of Wisconsin. It was there that he met Barbara, his wife of 41 years.

Whitehead began as a writer for the Star-Ledger based in Newark, N.J. He also spent a year in the journalism school as a graduate student at Columbia University, where he covered the Newark riots of 1967. He accepted a job in Chicago for the Sun-Times where he worked for the next five years as a political reporter. He also worked for a Chicago public television station as an anchor part-time.

In the summer of 1973, Whitehead was contacted by a friend who informed him of an opportunity to teach minorities interested in joining the field of journalism at Columbia University. The program was run by Howard Ziff, who had been an editor at the Chicago Daily News and a journalism professor at the University of Massachusetts. Whitehead commented on the benefits of applying for this job.

"My wife and I," he said, "who had both spent some time at Columbia and didn't have any plans for that summer, thought 'Why don't we go spend the summer in New York?'"

Ziff recalled that one of the three people he was looking to fill the positions, "had to be someone with a fine nuts-and-bolts experience in journalism as well as a broad knowledge of race and politics. That was Ralph."

Upon Whitehead's return to Chicago in 1973, Ziff called and suggested Whitehead apply to UMass. He received an informal job offer after being flown out for an interview.

"I find him to be extraordinarily capable of handling all aspects of reporting and deeply aware of the impacts [of events] that allow him to be close to his students [to be] a friend, anxious to understand their backgrounds, not just an imperial boss," said Ziff of Whitehead.

Whitehead talks in his classes about the latest trends, from Perez Hilton to piracy of music.

"I think Professor Whitehead is a great

See WHITEHEAD on page 3

Hobart hosts party

Police arrest at 'Hoedown'

25 arrests were made last weekend on Hobart Lane.

Amherst Police Department arrested 25 individuals Saturday evening and early Sunday morning according to The Springfield Republican. Three people suffered injuries related to a physical confrontation and were transported to Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton.

APD broke up a fight involving 20 to 25 people that stemmed from a large gathering related to the street's annual "Hobart Hoedown" event.

The charges against the 25 arrested include underage possession of alcohol, disorderly conduct, operating a motor vehicle under the influence of alcohol and resisting arrest.

Hobart Lane is located less than a mile north of campus directly off of North Pleasant Street. The street features several apartment complexes that are typically rented to UMass students.

In past years, the event has attracted hundreds of party-goers and revelers. However, the police have made an effort in recent years to limit the event by increasing their presence in the area. The original "Hoedown" took place in 1994 under the name "Hobart Ho-Down '94," according to an article in The Republican. Between 1,200 and 1,500 people attended the event and 11 kegs were confiscated by police.

In addition to the annual "Hoedown," dozens of college-aged individuals can be seen milling around the complexes on Friday and Saturday nights.

Staff Report

Electronic intrusion leads to new hire

Computer malfunction at UHS leaves 190 workstations out

The University of Massachusetts has hired an outside consult to assist in the ongoing investigation surrounding an electronic intrusion that left 190 computer workstations out of commission.

Stroz Friedberg, a consulting and technical services firm specializing in investigations, has been brought in to assist in conducting a forensic analysis of workstation disks at University Health Services. The University launched an investigation to determine if any files at UHS had been accessed during the intrusion shortly after the electronic breakin last month.

The electronic intrusion at UHS left 150 workstations offline and forced employees to use pens and paper to record patient information for a little over a week.

According to the Office of Information and Technology, all of the damaged workstations at UHS have been restored with the exception of a few machines set aside for use as training. Most patient information taken at UHS is now kept on paper and the workstations affected by the intrusion store only limited medical records.

The electronic intrusion damaged approximately 40 other computers around campus, including several at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian. All of the workstations affected exhibited several of the same characteristics as those at Health Services, according to University officials. OIT is assessing whether or not any information breaches occurred on those workstations as well.

According to officials, the perpetrators may have been attempting to use the workstations at UHS and across campus to illegally download music and movies. The full investigation is expected to be completed within the next several weeks.

Derrick Perkins

After 190 computer workstations at UHS were shutdown a few weeks ago, UMass hired an outside consult to investigate the intrusion.

Southwest hosts annual excellence ceremony

By Gisel Saillant
Collegian Staff

The Southwest residential area hosted its 7th Annual Community Excellence Awards Luncheon last Friday to recognize positive contributions students made to the Southwest community.

Out of the 4,420 students that reside in Southwest, five students from each cluster (55 in total) were selected to receive the award. The students were selected by the Resident Life Staff in each cluster, as they evaluated the student's involvements in different criteria.

The students were selected for their leadership skills, residence hall involvement and their ability to create a better living environment for their peers. Those chosen were involved in cluster programs, assisted Resident Assistants with bulletin boards or excelled as House Council members, Community Leaders and Cluster Office staff members. Their participation to other commitments outside their cluster was also considered.

Area Director Jean Ahlstrand MacKimmie welcomed everyone as she commented on the importance of recognizing these students who have made Southwest a better place to live.

Leila Griffith, award recipient and Cluster Office Manager of John Adams, gave the opening remarks and encouraged fellow recipients to become student leaders at the University of Massachusetts.

"Now you can take these skills you have learned, whether it's from house council, community leaders or just on your floor, and continue using them next year," Griffith said. "Run for government, join campus wide leadership groups and learn as many skills and make as many connections as possible."

The presentation of the awards began after each cluster was called up to the podium and read a short paragraph of the contributions each student has made.

"I was amazed that I won an award, I didn't think I could get recognized in such a huge campus," said freshman Jenifer Martinez, an award recipient from the Melville/Thoreau cluster.

Gisel Saillant can be reached at gsaillan@student.umass.edu.

Baseball team falls to Northeastern | Page 10

UMass centerfielder Brian Baudinet is tagged out at second base by Northeastern's James Donaldson during yesterday's game at Earl Lorden Field. The Minutemen lost 6-4.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 135
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COPIES EDITOR Adam Stagin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Katie Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seaburn
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ASST. WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Gaines

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY BY THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AT 113 CAMPUS CENTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS EDITORIALLY AUTONOMOUS AND OPERATING ON ENTIRELY INDEPENDENT FINANCES. FOUNDED IN 1890, IT WAS KNOWN AS MASS. COLLEGIAN FROM 1911 TO 1914 AND THE INDEX FROM 1914 TO 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1936, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN AWARDED THE PACEMAKER AWARD FOR EXCELLENCE IN JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES, CONTACT THE BUSINESS OFFICE AT 545-3500.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nicholas Belanger

COPY EDITOR
Greg McCarthy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Mike Sarkes

WEB EDITOR
Nick Bush

Gas taxes center of debate for presidential candidates

BY CATHERINE DODGE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Never before have two presidential campaigns staked so much on 18.4 cents.

Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama are closing out their marathon campaigning in Indiana and North Carolina tussling over Clinton's proposal to suspend the federal tax on each gallon of gasoline for the summer months, one of the few stark policy differences between the two Democratic presidential candidates.

A bipartisan group of more than 200 economists, including four Nobel Prize winners, signed a statement calling the gasoline-tax plan – also endorsed by Republican John McCain – a "bad idea." Obama derides it as a "gimmick." Clinton dismisses the economists and says Obama's opposition demonstrates he's out of touch with working-class voters.

The economy, especially energy costs, has moved front and center as the two candidates focused their messages for today's primaries in Indiana and North Carolina. Both candidates need at least one victory.

"If Obama can't rack up a comfortable win in North Carolina, questions about his deal-closing ability will intensify dramatically," said Rogan Kersh, professor of public service at New York University.

For Clinton "the pressure to drop out will be immense if she loses both of these states," David Redlawsk, a political science professor at the University of Iowa in Iowa City, said.

Obama has the lead among the delegates who will eventually decide the nomination, 1,743 to 1,607, according to an unofficial tally by the Associated Press. A candidate needs 2,025 to get the nomination.

Indiana and North Carolina combined have 187 pledged delegates at stake. While a split decision would make it almost impossible for Clinton to catch Obama in the delegate count, it would let her continue her fight though the seven remaining contests.

Polls show Clinton has the lead in Indiana 48 percent to 44 percent, while Obama maintains his edge in North Carolina, 50 percent to 42 percent, according to averages compiled by Pollster.com.

To make her appeal to working-class voters, a crucial constituency 'in the primary and the general election, Clinton is emphasizing an economic populist message.

Along with raising taxes on the wealthy and tougher negotiations with trading partners, Clinton said she wants to "provide some immediate relief" by suspending collection of the 18.4 cents-a-gallon gasoline tax during the summer driving season and taxing oil companies to make up for the lost revenue.

"Let's give you a break this summer," Clinton, 60, told a crowd in Greenville, North Carolina, yesterday.

Obama is making his own populist pitch by skipping the arena-sized venues he's favored in other states for smaller town hall-style events. He brought his wife and two young daughters on the trail to be at his side over the weekend when he met with voters, many of them the working-class Democrats who have tended to back Clinton in recent primaries.

He shook hands at a diner in Greenwood, Indiana, today and at a polling site at Butler University in Indianapolis. Later today he is scheduled to campaign in North Carolina before an evening rally in Raleigh.

Obama, last night, again blasted the summer gas-tax holiday idea, saying it offers "pennies for 90 days but probably won't deliver those pennies."

Such proposals are examples of when "politicians are saying something just to get through the next election instead of actually solving the problem," he said at the American Legion Mall in Indianapolis.

The gasoline-tax moratorium emerged as a campaign issue as the two Democrats, who on other issues have offered policy prescriptions with more similarities than differences, tried to contrast the choices before voters.

Clinton, a New York senator, proposes making up the lost government revenue through a temporary tax on profits made by oil companies from the rise in crude oil prices, her main difference on the issue with McCain, an Arizona senator who is the presumptive Republican nominee.

With gasoline prices averaging about $3.61 a gallon, Clinton says the move would save the typical family about $70 during the months of June, July and August. Obama says the savings would be about $30, a figure supported by independent analysts. Obama backed a state-tax moratorium in 2000 in Illinois and said that showed him it wouldn't work.

Speaking to reporters on the flight to Evansville, Clinton acknowledged that it's not likely Congress and President George W. Bush would move to suspend the gas tax.

"Realistically it's tough," she said, criticizing members of her own party for not taking a tough stand on behalf of consumers. "They've got to feel that Democrats are on their side. They have to know we're going to bat for them."

Economists including Joseph Stiglitz of Columbia University and Roger Myerson of the University of Chicago, both Nobel laureates, and former George H.W. Bush administration adviser Richard Schmalensee of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology signed the statement against the tax holiday. They said it would mostly benefit oil companies while reducing funds available for highway maintenance, the same argument advanced by Obama.

When asked again yesterday whether any economists support the gas-tax suspension, Clinton campaign spokesman Mo Elleithee said "finding economists to support this hasn't been our focus. Our focus is on helping real people by giving them a break at the pumps in a fiscally responsible way."

As gas prices rise, presidential hopefuls present their solutions. Senator Barak Obama has outlined a broad energy plan, which includes profits tax on oil companies.

Nearly 100 people arrested in Cali. college drug bust

Police arrested 75 students at San Diego State University and confiscated 2 kilograms of cocaine and many other drugs.

BY ALLISON HOFFMAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Dozens of San Diego State University students were arrested after a sweeping drug investigation found that some fraternity members openly dealt drugs and one even sent a mass text message advertising cocaine, authorities said Tuesday.

Two kilograms of cocaine were seized, along with 350 Ecstasy pills, marijuana, psychedelic mushrooms, hash oil, methamphetamine, illicit prescription drugs, several guns and at least $60,000 in cash, authorities said.

Of the 96 people arrested, 75 were students. Eighteen of the students were arrested Tuesday when nine search warrants were executed at various locations, including fraternities, said Jesse Rodriguez, San Diego County assistant district attorney.

The undercover probe, dubbed Operation Sudden Fall, was sparked by the cocaine overdose death of a student in May 2007, authorities said. As the investigation continued, another student, from Mesa College, died Feb. 26 of a cocaine overdose at an SDSU fraternity house, the DEA said.

Those arrested included a student who was about to receive a criminal justice degree and another who was to receive a master's degree in homeland security.

"A sad commentary is that when one of these individuals was arrested, they inquired as (to) whether or not his arrest and incarceration would have an effect on him becoming a federal law enforcement officer," said Ralph Partridge, special agent in charge of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration in San Diego.

Some defendants were scheduled to appear in state court to face charges Tuesday.

During the probe, investigators discovered that in some fraternities most members were aware of "organized drug dealing occurring from the fraternity houses by its members," the DEA said in a news release.

"Undercover agents purchased cocaine from fraternity members and confirmed that a hierarchy existed for the purpose of selling drugs for money," the DEA said.

The district attorney's office said search warrants were served in San Diego and suburban La Mesa, including the Theta Chi fraternity house and several apartments.

A member of Theta Chi sent out a mass text message to his "faithful customers" stating that he and his "associates" would be unable to sell cocaine while they were in Las Vegas over one weekend, according to the DEA. The text promoted a cocaine "sale" and listed the reduced prices.

Theta Chi's San Diego chapter declined to comment.

"We're talking to our advisers," said John Phillips, a past president of the chapter.

Dale Taylor, the fraternity's national executive director, said he was "obviously shocked and saddened" by the allegations.

Theta Chi has prohibited the San Diego chapter from group activities like parties or sports and will investigate additional disciplinary measures, up to expulsion of members or the entire chapter.

Theta Chi, based in Indianapolis, has 131 chapters in the U.S. and Canada and more than 161,000 initiates. It was founded in 1856.

The San Diego chapter was founded 61 years ago and has 65 members.

"They were on the upswing," Taylor said. "They had improved their recruitment. They were trying to raise money for a new house."

University police and federal drug agents worked together in the investigation, making more than 130 undercover drug buys at locations including fraternity houses, student parking areas and dormitories, authorities said.

Got trash?
Dump your apartment cleanout garbage in the right place:
Bring your student ID to get in!
The Amherst Transfer Station
Trash, furniture, mattresses, TVs, computers & appliances accepted
Disposal fees apply
740 Belchertown Road (Route 9), 2 miles East of Dunkin Doughnuts
Open 8am-2pm Tuesdays, Thursdays, & Saturdays
For more information, visit www.amherstma.gov/recycling or call the Amherst Dept. of Public Works 413-259-3050

Harvard past tied to slavery, but makes no effort to research

BY BRITTANY M. LLEWELLYN AND ALEXANDRA PERLOFF-GILES
THE HARVARD CRIMSON

(U-WIRE) — With initiatives like a new financial aid program, Harvard often start trends that ripple through higher education. But when it comes to investigating its institutional history, the University might do well to take a cue from its peers.

Like many venerable American universities, Harvard's past is tied to slavery: for decades, if not centuries, the University inculcated pro-slavery sentiment and benefitted from funds that were the fruits of the slave trade or slave labor. But unlike many of its peers — such as Brown and Yale — Harvard has never conducted a formal examination of its past.

And though the University has no plans to launch such an investigation, many feel the time is right for Harvard to do so, given that University President Drew G. Faust — a leading Civil War historian and a self-professed "civil-rights advocate and activist" — is at the helm.

"Harvard is perhaps uniquely positioned to engage in an exploration of our country's history with slavery and its connection to the present," says Alfred L. Brophy, an expert on civil rights litigation at the University of Alabama School of Law. "Now is a good time for Harvard to do more in terms of an investigation, and Drew Faust, who is our nation's leading historian of the Old South, is an ideal person to lead this process."

But Faust said that despite her academic interests, she will not be calling for an institutional investigation of any kind, even while acknowledging that the question of Harvard's entanglements with slavery is "intriguing" for students and professors to explore.

"I'm not going to be doing this as a presidential project," she said.

While Harvard, by virtue of being in northern New England, was less entangled in slavery than its peers in the South, the University nevertheless was implicated to a degree in the slave trade.

Along with Brown, Harvard was mentioned in a series of class-action lawsuits beginning in 2002, in which descendants of slaves sought compensation for damages from private corporations that profited from slavery. The universities, while not sued directly, were cited as examples of schools whose fortunes rested historically on the institution of slavery.

Shortly after the lawsuits were filed, Harvard Law School professor Charles J. Ogletree, Jr. published an op-ed in The New York Times arguing that Harvard, Brown, and Yale were all "probable targets" of a lawsuit to be filed by his Reparations Coordinating Committee later that year.

While all of the class-action suits were dismissed — and Ogletree's threatened lawsuit never materialized — the accusations prompted officials at Yale and Brown to examine the extent to which their institutions benefited from slavery.

Whitehead shares interests

WHITEHEAD from page 1

teacher," said Lauren Codwise, a junior in Whitehead's Media Criticism course. "Because he is very in touch with his students and the generation to which they belong."

While he and his family settled down in Amherst, Whitehead stayed active outside of the University. In 1975, while still working at UMass, he was the campaign press secretary for former Boston Mayor Kevin White.

Ralph Whitehead teaches in the Journalism department.

Whitehead said the experience was, "a rare opportunity for me... I was a complete newcomer to Massachusetts, and it was really a baptism by immersion in Massachusetts politics."

Following his success in the campaign for the reelection of White, Whitehead worked in Washington, D.C. for the Department of Labor. From 1994 to 1995, he was an advisor to Robert Reich, the Secretary of Labor. While in Washington, Whitehead had a mild heart attack, and had a quintuple bypass operation.

In the fall of 1995, he returned to UMass, taking a less active role in reporting and vocalizing opinions on electoral politics.

Whitehead is still sought after by newspapers. Recently, he was a guest columnist for the Boston Globe, the fourth such writer in the new feature of the newspaper. Other journalists contact him occasionally for his input on politics for use in their articles.

One of his more nationally recognized articles was in the Boston Globe Magazine. Whitehead observed the growing trend of the classic blue collar voter being replaced by the "new collar" voter.

The term, "Permanent Campaign," coined by Whitehead and his peers in the late 1970s, is still widely accepted and used today. According to Whitehead, a candidate turned elected official must, "continually build and maintain popular support."

What he knows about politics, he has learned from experience. What he knows about pop culture, he learns from his students and his curious interrogations. Whitehead may not have been the mayor of Boston or the Secretary of Labor, but his work with them has given him unique information that he, in turn, can pass on to his students.

Volcano erupts after 9,000 yrs.

BY EDUARDO GALLARDO
ASSOCIATED PRESS

The long-dormant Chaiten volcano blasted ash some 20 miles (30 kilometers) into the Andean sky on Tuesday, forcing thousands to evacuate and fouling a huge stretch of the South American continent.

The thick column of ash climbed into the stratosphere and blew eastward for hundreds of miles (kilometers) over Patagonia to the Atlantic Ocean, forcing schools and a regional airport to close. Citizens of both countries were advised to wear masks to avoid breathing the dangerous fallout.

The five-day-old eruption is the first in at least 9,000 years for the volcano in southern Chile, according to volcanologists at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington.

Chilean officials ordered the total evacuation of Chaiten, a small provincial capital in an area of lakes and glacier-carved fjords just six miles (10 kilometers) from the roiling cloud.

Also emptied was the soot-coated border town of Futaleufu, about 75 miles (120 kilometers) from the volcano.

The gritty, gray-white blizzard covered houses, roads and even cattle. People wrapped cloths around their faces and wore surgical masks as they slogged through the mess.

About a 1/2 inch (1 centimeter) of ash coated the Argentine tourist town of Esquel, a Patagonian resort favored by backpackers and skiers at the foot of the Andes whose airport and schools have been closed since Saturday.

The fallout covered a third of Argentina's Minnesota-sized province of Chubut, provincial Gov. Mario Das Neves said.

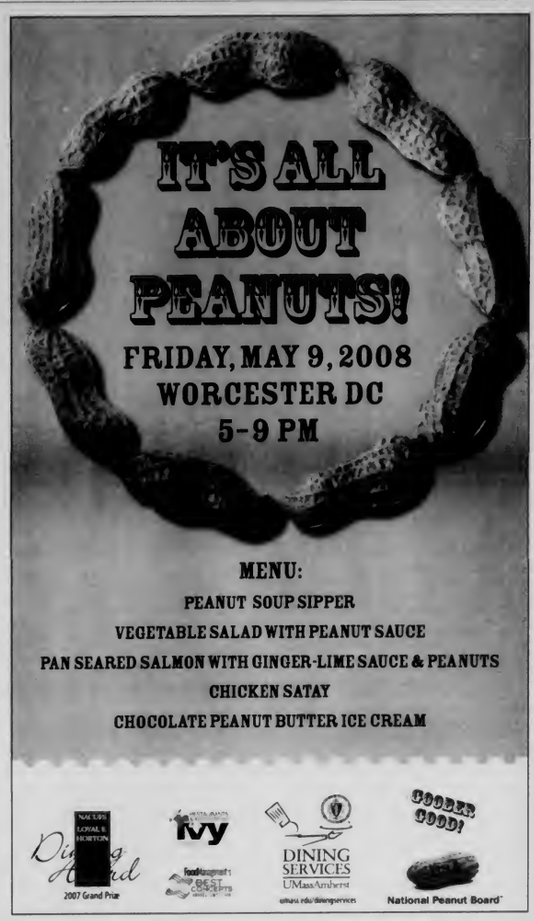
While volcanologists around the world eagerly awaited data on the scope of the eruption, one local expert got an up-close look when he accompanied police and air force teams over the 3,950-foot (1,200 meter) mountain.

Volcanologist Juan Cayupi told The Associated Press by telephone that Chaiten's two small craters have morphed into a large, single crater, and "a large amount of ash, particles, gas" was pouring out.

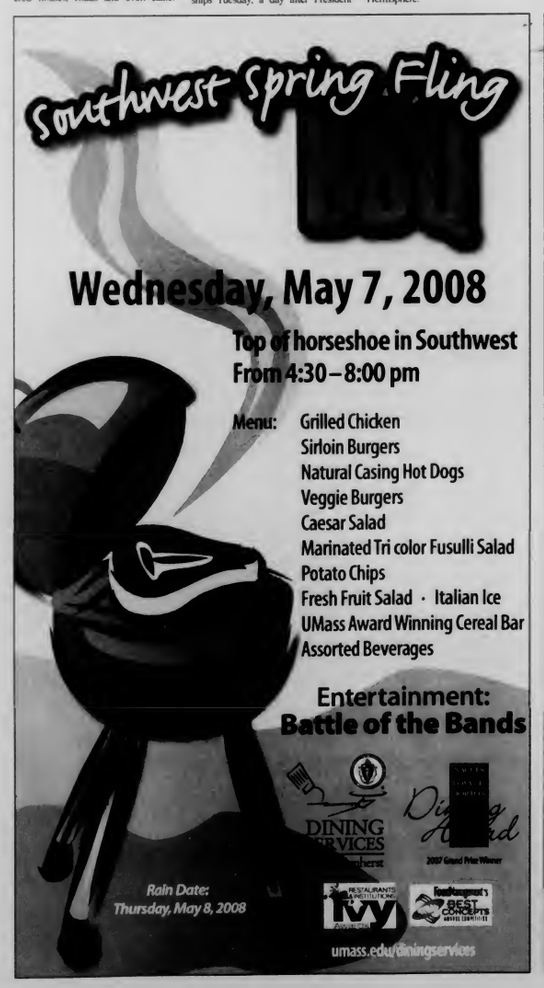
Lava was rising within this crater but has not yet spilled over, said Luis Lara, another volcanologist with the government's Geology and Mining Service.

The few remaining residents of Chaiten were transferred to two navy ships Tuesday, a day after President Michelle Bachelet visited the town, pledging financial help for people whose homes were damaged or livestock died after foraging on ash-covered grass.

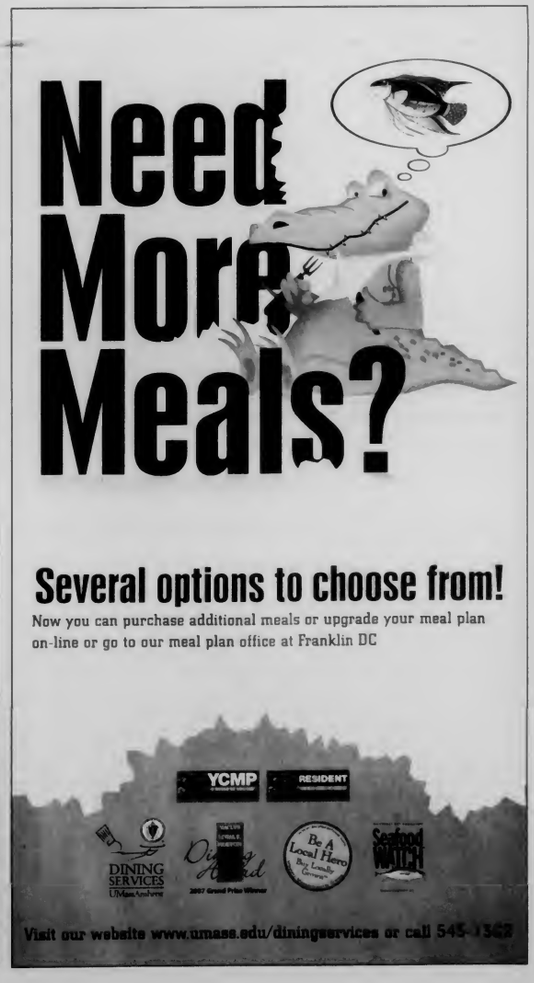
Experts said it is too early to say whether the volcano will affect the world's climate.



So far, Chaiten has emitted only a few thousand tons of sulfur dioxide, "which is very small," said Simon Carn, a University of Maryland-Baltimore Campus volcanologist who uses satellites to measure volcanic gases.



In general, a volcano must spew at least 1 million tons of sulfur dioxide into the stratosphere to have a global effect on climate, said Alan Robock, a Rutgers University professor who co-authored a book on the subject.



After eruptions of unusual size, sulfur dioxide, converted into sulfuric acid, can form a thin white cloud in the atmosphere that reflects sunlight away from Earth.

The Philippines' Mount Pinatubo produced a brief cooling of the climate after spewing 20 million tons of sulfur dioxide in 1991.

But Robock said this volcano is so close to the South Pole that any cooling would likely be limited to the Southern Hemisphere.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 135

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COMICS EDITOR Adam Staigin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Katie Olsein
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwasser
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbascianno
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY BY THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS DURING THE SCHOOL YEAR. THE COLLEGIAN IS DISTRIBUTED FREE OF CHARGE. ADDITIONAL COPIES ARE AVAILABLE FOR PURCHASE AT THE COLLEGIAN BUSINESS OFFICE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS MASS. ETC., RENAMED COLLEGE SCIENCES (1901), THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN (1914) AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN (1956). PURSUANT TO CHAPTER 1996, THE COLLEGIAN'S ASSETS WERE SOLD TO THE COLLEGIAN INC. IN 1994. FOR ADDITIONAL EDITIONS SEE OUR ARCHIVES AT ARCHIVES.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nicholas Belanger

COPY EDITOR
Greg McCarthy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Mike Sarkes

WEB EDITOR
Nick Bush

Gas taxes center of debate for presidential candidates

BY CATHERINE DODGE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Never before have two presidential campaigns staked so much on 18.4 cents.

Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama are closing out their marathon campaigning in Indiana and North Carolina tussling over Clinton's proposal to suspend the federal tax on each gallon of gasoline for the summer months, one of the few stark policy differences between the two Democratic presidential candidates.

A bipartisan group of more than 200 economists, including four Nobel Prize winners, signed a statement calling the gasoline-tax plan – also endorsed by Republican John McCain – a "bad idea." Obama derides it as a "gimmick." Clinton dismisses the economists and says Obama's opposition demonstrates he's out of touch with working-class voters.

The economy, especially energy costs, has moved front and center as the two candidates focused their messages for today's primaries in Indiana and North Carolina. Both candidates need at least one victory.

"If Obama can't rack up a comfortable win in North Carolina, questions about his deal-closing ability will intensify dramatically," said Rogan Kersh, professor of public service at New York University.

For Clinton "the pressure to drop out will be immense if she loses both of these states," David Redlawsk, a political science professor at the University of Iowa in Iowa City, said.

Obama has the lead among the delegates who will eventually decide the nomination, 1,743 to 1,607, according to an unofficial tally by the Associated Press. A candidate needs 2,025 to get the nomination.

Indiana and North Carolina combined have 187 pledged delegates at stake. While a split decision would make it almost impossible for Clinton to catch Obama in the delegate count, it would let her continue her fight though the seven remaining contests.

Polls show Clinton has the lead in Indiana 48 percent to 44 percent, while Obama maintains his edge in North Carolina, 50 percent to 42 percent, according to averages compiled by Pollster.com.

To make her appeal to working-class voters, a crucial constituency in the primary and the general election, Clinton is emphasizing an economic populist message.

Along with raising taxes on the wealthy and tougher negotiations with trading partners, Clinton said she wants to "provide some immediate relief" by suspending collection of the 18.4 cents-a-gallon gasoline tax during the summer driving season and taxing oil companies to make up for the lost revenue.

"Let's give you a break this summer," Clinton, 60, told a crowd in Greenville, North Carolina, yesterday.

Obama is making his own populist pitch by skipping the arena-sized venues he's favored in other states for smaller town hall-style events. He brought his wife and two young daughters on the trail to be at his side over the weekend when he met with voters, many of them the working-class Democrats who have tended to back Clinton in recent primaries.

He shook hands at a diner in Greenwood, Indiana, today and at a polling site at Butler University in Indianapolis. Later today he is scheduled to campaign in North Carolina before an evening rally in Raleigh.

Obama, last night, again blasted the summer gas-tax holiday idea, saying it offers "pennies for 90 days but probably won't deliver those pennies."

Such proposals are examples of when "politicians are saying something just to get through the next election instead of actually solving the problem," he said at the American Legion Mall in Indianapolis.

The gasoline-tax moratorium emerged as a campaign issue as the two Democrats, who on other issues have offered policy prescriptions with more similarities than differences, tried to contrast the choices before voters.

Clinton, a New York senator, proposes making up the lost government revenue through a temporary tax on profits made by oil companies from the rise in crude oil prices, her main difference on the issue with McCain, an Arizona senator who is the presumptive Republican nominee.

With gasoline prices averaging about $3.61 a gallon, Clinton says the move would save the typical family about $70 during the months of June, July and August. Obama says the savings would be about $30, a figure supported by independent analysts. Obama backed a state-tax moratorium in 2000 in Illinois and said that showed him it wouldn't work.

Speaking to reporters on the flight to Evansville, Clinton acknowledged that it's not likely Congress and President George W. Bush would move to suspend the gas tax.

"Realistically it's tough," she said, criticizing members of her own party for not taking a tough stand on behalf of consumers. "They've got to feel that Democrats are on their side. They have to know we're going to bat for them."

Economists including Joseph Stiglitz of Columbia University and Roger Myerson of the University of Chicago, both Nobel laureates, and former George H.W. Bush administration adviser Richard Schmalensee of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology signed the statement against the tax holiday. They said it would mostly benefit oil companies while reducing funds available for highway maintenance, the same argument advanced by Obama.

When asked again yesterday whether any economists support the gas-tax suspension, Clinton campaign spokesman Mo Elleithee said "finding economists to support this hasn't been our focus. Our focus is on helping real people by giving them a break at the pumps in a fiscally responsible way."

As gas prices rise, presidential hopefuls present their solutions. Senator Barak Obama has outlined a broad energy plan, which includes profits tax on oil companies.

Nearly 100 people arrested in Cali. college drug bust

Police arrested 75 students at San Diego State University and confiscated 2 kilograms of cocaine and many other drugs.

BY ALLISON HOFFMAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Dozens of San Diego State University students were arrested after a sweeping drug investigation found that some fraternity members openly dealt drugs and one even sent a mass text message advertising cocaine, authorities said Tuesday.

Two kilograms of cocaine were seized, along with 350 Ecstasy pills, marijuana, psychedelic mushrooms, hash oil, methamphetamine, illicit prescription drugs, several guns and at least $60,000 in cash, authorities said.

Of the 96 people arrested, 75 were students. Eighteen of the students were arrested Tuesday when nine search warrants were executed at various locations, including fraternities, said Jesse Rodriguez, San Diego County assistant district attorney.

The undercover probe, dubbed Operation Sudden Fall, was sparked by the cocaine overdose death of a student in May 2007, authorities said. As the investigation continued, another student, from Mesa College, died Feb. 26 of a cocaine overdose at an SDSU fraternity house, the DEA said.

Those arrested included a student who was about to receive a criminal justice degree and another who was to receive a master's degree in homeland security.

"A sad commentary is that when one of these individuals was arrested, they inquired as (to) whether or not his arrest and incarceration would have an effect on him becoming a federal law enforcement officer," said Ralph Partridge, special agent in charge of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration in San Diego.

Some defendants were scheduled to appear in state court to face charges Tuesday.

During the probe, investigators discovered that in some fraternities most members were aware of "organized drug dealing occurring from the fraternity houses by its members," the DEA said in a news release.

"Undercover agents purchased cocaine from fraternity members and confirmed that a hierarchy existed for the purpose of selling drugs for money," the DEA said.

The district attorney's office said search warrants were served in San Diego and suburban La Mesa, including the Theta Chi fraternity house and several apartments.

A member of Theta Chi sent out a mass text message to his "faithful customers" stating that he and his "associates" would be unable to sell cocaine while they were in Las Vegas over one weekend, according to the DEA. The text promoted a cocaine "sale" and listed the reduced prices.

Theta Chi's San Diego chapter declined to comment.

"We're talking to our advisers," said John Phillips, a past president of the chapter.

Dale Taylor, the fraternity's national executive director, said he was "obviously shocked and saddened" by the allegations.

Theta Chi has prohibited the San Diego chapter from group activities like parties or sports and will investigate additional disciplinary measures, up to expulsion of members or the entire chapter.

Theta Chi, based in Indianapolis, has 131 chapters in the U.S. and Canada and more than 161,000 initiates. It was founded in 1856.

The San Diego chapter was founded 61 years ago and has 65 members.

"They were on the upswing," Taylor said. "They had improved their recruitment. They were trying to raise money for a new house."

University police and federal drug agents worked together in the investigation, making more than 130 undercover drug buys at locations including fraternity houses, student parking areas and dormitories, authorities said.

Got trash?
Dump your apartment cleanout garbage in the right place:

The Amherst Transfer Station
Trash, furniture, mattresses, TVs, computers & appliances accepted
Disposal fees apply
740 Belchertown Road (Route 9), 2 miles East of Dunkin Doughnuts
Open 8am-2pm Tuesdays, Thursdays, & Saturdays
For more information, visit www.amherstma.gov/recycling or call the Amherst Dept. of Public Works 413-259-3050

Harvard past tied to slavery, but makes no effort to research

BY BRITTANY M. LLEWELLYN AND ALEXANDRA PERLOFF-GILES
THE HARVARD CRIMSON

(U-WIRE) — With initiatives like a new financial aid program, Harvard often start trends that ripple through higher education. But when it comes to investigating its institutional history, the University might do well to take a cue from its peers.

Like many venerable American universities, Harvard's past is tied to slavery: for decades, if not centuries, the University inculcated pro-slavery sentiment and benefitted from funds that were the fruits of the slave trade or slave labor. But unlike many of its peers — such as Brown and Yale — Harvard has never conducted a formal examination of its past.

And though the University has no plans to launch such an investigation, many feel the time is right for Harvard to do so, given that University President Drew G. Faust — a leading Civil War historian and a self-professed "civil-rights advocate and activist" — is at the helm.

"Harvard is perhaps uniquely positioned to engage in an exploration of our country's history with slavery and its connection to the present," says Alfred L. Brophy, an expert on civil rights litigation at the University of Alabama School of Law. "Now is a good time for Harvard to do more in terms of an investigation, and Drew Faust, who is our nation's leading historian of the Old South, is an ideal person to lead this process."

But Faust said that despite her academic interests, she will not be calling for an institutional investigation of any kind, even while acknowledging that the question of Harvard's entanglements with slavery is "intriguing" for students and professors to explore.

"I'm not going to be doing this as a presidential project," she said.

While Harvard, by virtue of being in northern New England, was less entangled in slavery than its peers in the South, the University nevertheless was implicated to a degree in the slave trade.

Along with Brown, Harvard was mentioned in a series of class-action lawsuits beginning in 2002, in which descendants of slaves sought compensation for damages from private corporations that profited from slavery. The universities, while not sued directly, were cited as examples of schools whose fortunes rested historically on the institution of slavery.

Shortly after the lawsuits were filed, Harvard Law School professor Charles J. Ogletree, Jr. published an op-ed in The New York Times arguing that Harvard, Brown, and Yale were all "probable targets" of a lawsuit to be filed by his Reparations Coordinating Committee later that year.

While all of the class-action suits were dismissed — and Ogletree's threatened lawsuit never materialized — the accusations prompted officials at Yale and Brown to examine the extent to which their institutions benefited from slavery.

Whitehead shares interests

WHITEHEAD from page 1

teacher," said Lauren Codwise, a junior in Whitehead's Media Criticism course. "Because he is very in touch with his students and the generation to which they belong."

While he and his family settled down in Amherst, Whitehead stayed active outside of the University. In 1975, while still working at UMass, he was the campaign press secretary for former Boston Mayor Kevin White.

Ralph Whitehead teaches in the Journalism department.

Whitehead said the experience was, "a rare opportunity for me… I was a complete newcomer to Massachusetts, and it was really a baptism by immersion in Massachusetts politics."

Following his success in the campaign for the reelection of White, Whitehead worked in Washington, D.C. for the Department of Labor. From 1994 to 1995, he was an advisor to Robert Reich, the Secretary of Labor. While in Washington, Whitehead had a mild heart attack, and had a quintuple bypass operation.

In the fall of 1995, he returned to UMass, taking a less active role in reporting and vocalizing opinions on electoral politics.

Whitehead is still sought after by newspapers. Recently, he was a guest columnist for the Boston Globe, the fourth such writer in the new feature of the newspaper. Other journalists contact him occasionally for his input on politics for use in their articles.

One of his more nationally recognized articles was in the Boston Globe Magazine. Whitehead observed the growing trend of the classic blue collar voter being replaced by the "new collar" voter.

The term, "Permanent Campaign," coined by Whitehead and his peers in the late 1970s, is still widely accepted and used today. According to Whitehead, a candidate turned elected official must, "continually build and maintain popular support."

What he knows about politics, he has learned from experience. What he knows about pop culture, he learns from his students and his curious interrogations. Whitehead may not have been the mayor of Boston or the Secretary of Labor, but his work with them has given him unique information that he, in turn, can pass on to his students.

Volcano erupts after 9,000 yrs.

BY EDUARDO GALLARDO
ASSOCIATED PRESS

The long-dormant Chaiten volcano blasted ash some 20 miles (30 kilometers) into the Andean sky on Tuesday, forcing thousands to evacuate and fouling a huge stretch of the South American continent.

The thick column of ash climbed into the stratosphere and blew eastward for hundreds of miles (kilometers) over Patagonia to the Atlantic Ocean, forcing schools and a regional airport to close. Citizens of both countries were advised to wear masks to avoid breathing the dangerous fallout.

The five-day-old eruption is the first in at least 9,000 years for the volcano in southern Chile, according to volcanologists at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington.

Chilean officials ordered the total evacuation of Chaiten, a small provincial capital in an area of lakes and glacier-carved fjords just six miles (10 kilometers) from the roiling cloud.

Ash emptied was the soot-coated border town of Futaleufu, about 75 miles (120 kilometers) from the volcano.

The gritty, gray-white blizzard covered houses, roads and even cattle. People wrapped cloths around their faces and wore surgical masks as they slogged through the mess.

About a 1/2 inch (1 centimeter) of ash coated the Argentine tourist town of Esquel, a Patagonian resort favored by backpackers and skiers at the foot of the Andes whose airport and schools have been closed since Saturday.

The fallout covered a third of Argentina's Minnesota-sized province of Chubut, provincial Gov. Mario Das Neves said.

While volcanologists around the world eagerly awaited data on the scope of the eruption, one local expert got an up-close look when he accompanied police and air force teams over the 3,950-foot (1,200 meter) mountain.

Volcanologist Juan Cayupi told The Associated Press by telephone that Chaiten's two small craters have morphed into a large, single crater, and "a large amount of ash, particles, gas" was pouring out.

Lava was rising within this crater but has not yet spilled over, said Luis Lara, another volcanologist with the government's Geology and Mining Service.

The few remaining residents of Chaiten were transferred to two navy ships Tuesday, a day after President Michelle Bachelet visited the town, pledging financial help for people whose homes were damaged or livestock died after foraging on ash-covered grass.

Experts said it is too early to say whether the volcano will affect the world's climate.

So far, Chaiten has emitted only a few thousand tons of sulfur dioxide, "which is very small," said Simon Carn, a University of Maryland-Baltimore Campus volcanologist who uses satellites to measure volcanic gases.

In general, a volcano must spew at least 1 million tons of sulfur dioxide into the stratosphere to have a global effect on climate, said Alan Robock, a Rutgers University professor who co-authored a book on the subject.

After eruptions of unusual size, sulfur dioxide, converted into sulfuric acid, can form a thin white cloud in the atmosphere that reflects sunlight away from Earth.

The Philippines' Mount Pinatubo produced a brief cooling of the climate after spewing 20 million tons of sulfur dioxide in 1991.

But Robock said this volcano is so close to the South Pole that any cooling would likely be limited to the Southern Hemisphere.

IT'S ALL ABOUT PEANUTS!
FRIDAY, MAY 9, 2008
WORCESTER DC
5-9 PM

MENU:
PEANUT SOUP SIPPER
VEGETABLE SALAD WITH PEANUT SAUCE
PAN SEARED SALMON WITH GINGER-LIME SAUCE & PEANUTS
CHICKEN SATAY
CHOCOLATE PEANUT BUTTER ICE CREAM

2007 Grand Prize
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst umass.edu/diningservices COOKIE GOOD!
National Peanut Board

Southwest Spring Fling
Wednesday, May 7, 2008
Top of horseshoe in Southwest
From 4:30–8:00 pm

Menu:
Grilled Chicken
Sirloin Burgers
Natural Casing Hot Dogs
Veggie Burgers
Caesar Salad
Marinated Tri color Fusulli Salad
Potato Chips
Fresh Fruit Salad · Italian Ice
UMass Award Winning Cereal Bar
Assorted Beverages

Entertainment:
Battle of the Bands

Rain Date: Thursday, May 8, 2008
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
2007 Grand Prize Winner
umass.edu/diningservices

Need More Meals?

Several options to choose from!
Now you can purchase additional meals or upgrade your meal plan on-line or go to our meal plan office at Franklin DC

YCMP RESIDENT
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
2007 Grand Prize Winner
Be A Local Hero
Seafood WATCH
Visit our website www.umass.edu/diningservices or call 545-1362

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, MAY 7, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Hillary's 'me' campaign

The Huffington Post recently published an article titled "Clinton Camp Says it Will Use the Nuclear Option." In short, the Clinton campaign confirmed intentions to maneuver its way through the democratic convention in such a way that it could destroy the Democratic Party for at least an entire generation.

Michael Phillis

The "nuclear option" refers to a strategy that would force the seating of the combined 366-delegate Florida and Michigan delegations. It would use the Clinton-backing, 30-member rules committee to push through the vote to seat the delegation at the end of the month, swinging the delegate count strongly toward camp Clinton. If this happens, the Clinton campaign believes they would have an advantage of about 55 delegates, thus making her the probable Democratic nominee.

Florida and Michigan were punished by the Democratic Party for trying to move their primaries up in the presidential election. There was an agreement that their delegates would not be seated at the convention. Obama operated under these rules, his name did not appear on the ballot with Clinton at all in Michigan and he did not campaign for votes in Florida.

Obama currently holds a small lead in the national polls over Clinton and both Democratic candidates, when paired up with McCain in the nation election polls, are narrowly ahead. Obama's poll numbers are still very high, demonstrating that even after the Wright controversy, his support is holding.

The millions of supporters that Obama holds strongly will, of course, not react well to the Clinton camp forcing her nomination through by overturning rules that she herself swore to uphold.

This country has spent almost eight years with a president who would change the rules to match his decision making. The country has been down that path and nothing good has come from it. We must, as a country, make every effort to avoid our past mistakes and there is evidence that every effort to avoid electing such a president must be undertaken.

However, one of the biggest concerns among Democrats is what the Clintons' egocentric, selfish rush to the nomination will do to their hopes for the White House.

Clinton's philosophy is, "it's either me or nobody."

Democrats must remember the time of Bill Clinton to understand the harm that even a united election for president involving the Clintons can do to the health of the party. After just two years in the White House, and with the Clintons putting their own self interests over that of the party, both the House of Representatives and Senate turned from a Democratic majority into what would be a new wave of Republican rule. The selfish nature of the Clintons, which is being demonstrated in full force by Hillary in this election cycle, must be remembered. No longer can the Clinton political machine be romanticized after the Bush years of fear, or can economic downturn cloud the memory of the turbulent Clinton White House years.

If this cheating gains Clinton the nomination there will barely be a Democratic Party left after all of the destruction.

With Obama voters representing what some have called a new political movement, this election cycle at the very least has revitalized the party into a new realm of political activism and interest. Young people and independents are rushing to the aid of this new public figure, hoping that his clean-cut persona and awe inspiring political skills can somehow heave this country out of the political mess that we are all wallowing in.

Black voters who have come out in droves for Obama will not vote for Clinton in the general election. The newfound interest and increasing activism that has somehow unearthed itself under Obama will quickly disappear if Clinton puts herself before the country and slams her way through a brokered convention to become the party's hope for the presidency.

If this cheating gains Clinton the nomination there will barely be a Democratic Party left after all of the destruction.

The brokered democratic convention in 1980 that gave the presidential nomination to Jimmy Carter with Ted Kennedy in opposition meant the destruction of the hopes of the progressive party's White House dreams. This, however, was a minor fight. Still, Carter would only win six states and the District of Columbia.

What Clinton is planning on is many times worse. Neither Ted Kennedy nor Jimmy Carter attempted to bend the rules to insure the nomination and at the end of the day, most democrats were able to agree that the fight was fair. This will not happen if Clinton forces through the seating of the Michigan and Florida delegations. Her selfishness will inspire only revolt among democrats that feel that, once again, they were cheated out of their vote for president.

The blatant, self-centered, "nobody but me" attitude of the Clinton campaign must be realized by voters and action must be taken now. Only a negative outcome can be foreseen if Clinton is to pull some backhanded deal out of a smoke filled room at the convention.

Do not underestimate the ability of the Clinton political machine to fight its way out of almost inevitable doom to achieve their goals. Winning the nomination is one thing. Forcing the nomination through and alienating half of the party is quite another.

Michael Phillis is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mphillis@dailycollegian.com

For U.S., a polite and proper British debate

Dan Nicastro

About a year and a half ago, I was in my dorm room flipping through television channels on a Sunday night to find some escape from my homework. As it was midnight on Sunday, there was very little worth watching. Usually, when nothing's on, I end up just keeping SportsCenter on in the background for two hours, but for some reason I ended up watching C-SPAN.

For those of you not familiar with the channel, C-SPAN was created in 1979 to "provide public access to the political process." C-SPAN broadcasts the proceedings of the House of Representatives and the Senate, conducts interviews with notable political figures and helps keep viewers informed politically. As I learned that night, C-SPAN also reaches across the pond to broadcast Britain's "Prime Minister's Question Time" (PMQs).

"PMQs" began in the early 1960s as a way to provide members of Parliament access to the Prime Minister and provide more transparency in government. The session lasts 30 minutes every week. Parliament is in session and provides an opportunity for Members of Parliament to question the Prime Minister on anything that enters their mind.

It begins with the leader of the opposition party (currently the Conservatives) posing questions to the Prime Minister by addressing them to the Speaker of the House of Commons. The leader of the next largest party (currently the Liberal Democrats) is then allowed a few questions. Then, the floor opens up and the Speaker calls on Members of Parliament, giving them the opportunity to grill the Prime Minister on whatever subject they wish.

If you have 30 minutes to kill, I strongly suggest watching these sessions, as they probably amount to the most entertaining half hour on television.

Opposition leaders and Parliament Members often insert horribly snide comments and try to trap the Prime Minister with loaded questions, playing to the camera to try and placate their constituents and force Prime

If you have 30 minutes to kill, I strongly suggest watching … the most entertaining half hour on television.

Ministers to own up to the shortcomings of their policies. Supporters of the Prime Minister, on the other hand, lob softball questions and allow him or her to publicize examples of successful governmental initiatives.

As I watched the most recent PMQs, it dawned on me that this method of questioning provides a level of intimacy and transparency that may allow it to be implemented in situations outside of the British House of Commons.

This seems perfect for the workplace. If a situation arises where your boss starts to criticize your productivity, you could invoke your right to "Workplace Questions Time." All of your coworkers would gather in the large conference room as you and your boss sit across from one another. After leveling criticisms at your employer by addressing a predetermined Magistrate, the floor would open up to other employees who could live the American dream by calling their boss a good for nothing moron. Alternatively, employees could also live the American dream by ingratiating their way into middle-management.

Why stop at the office? This is also a useful tool for age old issues that divide parents and children. Surrounded by friends and relatives, the child can address the Magistrate and explain why their life is "so hard," saying things like "My parents don't get me," or "all my friends have later bedtimes than me and my parents just tell me to get used to it." Parents will have an opportunity to respond to these charges with bold assertions like "life isn't fair," and "your friends aren't any of my concern, you are." This will also allow children to see who among their relatives and friends will leap to their aid in this time of need and who will join the "opposition" and later become fodder for the slew of post-childhood therapists.

Speaking of therapy, this could be a great tool for a relationship. It's no secret that even the best couples argue, so why not provide an extra-legal arena for both parties to brutally criticize their significant other? Friends of each party in the relationship will gather around, supporting their respective friends as boyfriend and girlfriend indirectly accuse each other. Hopefully the exercise will be an eye opener and couples will use the information they learned about their true love in a productive manner. If, however, brutal honesty does more harm than good, it would be possible to modify the British system of questioning by introducing hallmarks of American culture, namely divorce court for the married couples and small claims court for the rest.

Of course, the obvious application is governmental in nature. Maybe the president would be willing to subject himself to unscripted and unexpected questions by the media, members of Congress or ordinary citizens. That, however, would require a government accountable for its actions and willing to sufficiently explain these actions to the American people. This means the only way this sort of direct questioning will ever be implemented will be if we let President Bush wear a powdered wig while answering questions.

For now I'll just have to keep watching C-SPAN and hope that someday I'm not challenged to a round of "PMQs." Just in case, though, I'll be taking applications for a magistrate. Any takers?

Dan Nicastro drives lives by the river. He can be reached at dnicastr@student.umass.edu.

fed/up?

ed/op.

The housing solution: It's in the grades

Nicholas O'Malley

Like many of you who had a general idea of where you wanted to live this upcoming semester, I saw my potential living situation slowly deteriorating until I was forced to look elsewhere for living. Hopefully, by the time this comes out I will have found a decent room and won't be forced to drag my refrigerator up six flights of stairs.

In a change from last year, UMass has decided to implement a housing system that is similar to that of selecting classes. So, in other words, SPIRE owns our souls. Again.

Unless you're not living on campus in the fall, you already knew this. You also know that the order in which students pick is based off of a ridiculous priority ranking system that's primarily a lottery. So if you ended up with a nice number, you're suddenly the best roommate ever.

The system is especially frustrating if you've already arranged who you will be rooming with next year. The system, which allows you to select open double rooms in the building and on the floor of your choosing, is the same whether or not you have a roommate. So it isn't a surprise when you look at a dorm and see half of the rooms filled with anonymous single students, severely limiting your options.

You'd think the University would encourage arranging doubles with the new system, since the whole point is so that you can coordinate where you live with other people. That, and it's less work for them.

The process of selecting your room, however, only comes once you've gotten to your assigned appointment, a date and time which is about as random as Plinko on the Price is Right.

Some might claim that this is the fairest system and that no one should get preferential treatment in terms of housing. That may be true, but with everything else in our culture determined by our accomplishments – privileges, age and everything else that makes us different – why stop there?

What better way to get students to improve their academics than ransoming their chance at decent housing?

I'm not saying that housing should be alphabetical or based on how rich you are (although many schools would love to do just that). Rather, the housing selection process should be determined by credits and GPA at the University. What better way to get students to improve their academics than ransoming their chance at decent housing? You get D's in four classes, you don't pick first.

Such a system would benefit the campus in a number of ways. First, the students who happen to have a higher GPA have more to offer to the campus. They have a better chance of graduating and are generally more involved on campus.

Second, the academic incentives would get some students to take a second glance at studying. It's always been alright to say "C's get degrees," because to some people, passing is passing.

Third, the potential increase in academic activity could improve the University's image and academic standing, ultimately bolstering its academic status among the other high profile Massachusetts schools and cementing it as one of the top learning institutions our great land has to offer. The successes of such a program at a public college would then attract unprecedented amounts of funding for education in both high schools and colleges. The funding would then revolutionize American culture, creating an intellectual utopia where all wars are ended, cancer and AIDS are cured and gas prices go down to fifty cents a gallon.

Ok, that was a bit of a stretch. But any incentive to improve academics at the University is a good thing. If the incentive system extended to the point where there was a slight reduction in fees for an outstanding academic record, there would be a definite response from the student body.

Saving money on housing for next semester should be ample motivation to not coast through the Gen Ed requirements and maybe even force students to shoot for Dean's list.

The University wants us to do better in school. It's for its own benefit. So if they truly wanted to make the effort to promote maintaining a good GPA, taking a lot of courses and engaging in academic activities, it could certainly do so.

Nick O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

going abroad?

don't be a gargoyle.

write a global perspectives column for ed/op!

editorial@dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, MAY 7, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Art on display at FAC

Festival of Arts to showcase student talents on Thursday

By Andrea Murray
Collegian Staff

This Friday the University Programming Council will be hosting the fifth annual Festival of the Arts. Attendees can expect a wider array of talent than in previous festivals.

Kasey Beckerman, one of the UPC organizers for the event, says they have booked acts ranging from slam poetry to the UMass Ballroom Dancing team. Arts and crafts events have also been arranged for all interested parties.

Festival of the Arts
May 9
Fine Arts Center
1 p.m.

Former Vice Chancellor Michael Gargano founded the event five years ago to celebrate the varied creativity on campus. Gargano wished to offer all students, art majors or not, the chance to showcase their artistic energies.

Local stand-up comedian and UMass student Adam Szajgin was originally scheduled to MC the event, but can no longer perform. Beckerman says they are exploring a variety of other possible MC's but nothing official has been announced. The event is co-sponsored by the Commuter Area Government.

Beckerman has booked roughly 19 acts. All acts can perform for a maximum of eight minutes. These time restraints, according to Beckerman, had to be emplaced in order to allow all applicants the chance to perform.

Unlike years past, no form of visual art, such as photography, 3D work or paintings, will be represented at the festival..

UMass student Ieresa Franco will belt out original lyrics over acoustic guitar riffs. Other singer-songwriters performing include Zachary Fisher and Alicia Benander.

"There will be culturally diverse groups performing," says Beckerman.

Providing a more visual dynamic to the event, hip-hop and Indian style dance teams will entertain the crowd. Additionally, the UMass Ballroom dancing team will take to the floor alongside the UMass Dance Team, Stage Crew Dance Team and Dynamic Motion Dance Team.

Boston based rap duo Static and Messiah will have a chance to spit on the mic. The duo victoriously, yet controversially, won the UPC Battle of the Bands last month, awarding them the privilege to open last Sunday's Spring Concert.

Mission Improvable is scheduled to perform as well as a few other comedic acts. Poet Gerald Baldino and slam poet Sean Sullivan will showcase their prose. Various other acts are slated to perform.

In addition to enjoying the live performances, attendees can also participate in creating their own arts and crafts. Beyond this, audience members can become art themselves as a Henna artist will be available to doodle on the bodies of anyone interested.

Paula Hodecker of the Student Union Crafts Center will be on duty to help students make personalized buttons from magazine pictures. A magazine and lacquer art station will also be set up.

Orchard Hill's favorite sugar-fix spot, Sweets N' More, will be catering. Beckerman says they will have brownies, vanilla ice cream and cookies. Free popcorn and water will also be available.

With the threat of inclement weather looming, Beckerman has begun to construct an indoor back-up plan to ensure that the event is held rain or shine. The actual decision on the location will not be made until Thursday.

Regardless of weather, The Festival of the Arts takes place inside or outside the Fine Arts Center on May 9 from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. The event is free to all.

Andrea Murray can be reached at akmurray@student.umass.edu

Battle of the Bands winners Static and Messiah, are one of many performers featured at the Festival of the Arts, scheduled for Thursday at the Fine Arts Center.

People's Party performed yesterday at the Southwest horseshoe. The truck they travel in was purchased on craigslist and doubles as a stage for the band.

People's Party truck on

Band uses mobile stage, performs at UMass

By Ryan McAskill
Collegian Staff

Amid the Frisbees, footballs and basketballs, the Horseshoe in Southwest was suddenly transformed into a concert venue. A truck pulled in, a band got out, set up and started playing. The band was The People's Party and the reason – because they felt like it.

The People's Party is an eight-piece funk/jazz/rock band out of Venice Beach, California that has been out on a "guerrilla tour" since February. Armed only with instruments, merchandise, camera and a pimped out U-Haul-esque truck, The People's Party has been traveling from festival to festival, college to college, playing free, spontaneous concerts.

The tour is in support of their newest album "We Am One," which can be heard on their MySpace page.

The core of the band is guitarist/vocalist Curtis James, keyboardist/vocalist David Garner and drummer Orlando Boyd, who have been together, on and off, for nearly three and a half years. They added bassist Tony Glaser, electric violin guitarist Will Volume, trombonist Justin Kirk, trumpet player Chris Bautista and saxophonist Robby Marshall months leading up to this tour.

"We had a couple of venues booked and had some festivals in mind, then just stopped any place that looks interesting," said Garner. "We're not actually invited to play the festivals, but we set up outside and play. We played South by Southwest for eight days."

The truck itself has an interesting story. It was created by a man for his son's band which was going to be part of an "MTV making the band"-inspired show, the track serving as a mobile venue. When the band broke up, the father needed to find a place for the truck, so he put it on craigslist.

"Dave [Garner] and I were talking about touring and his wife found the truck on craigslist," said Curtis James, a Shrewsbury, Mass native. "We got it for around $100,000 with 14,000 miles on it."

"The record label put up the cash," added Garner. "We're still paying it off, so it's not ours yet."

While one may think there are legal issues with just pulling into a random location and setting up a concert on the spot, they would be right. However it's much easier to get away with than one may think.

"We tried to go through the proper channels," said James. "There is just so much bureaucracy it's not worth it. We have

See PARTY on page 6

Neva Dinova returns with new album

Omaha natives to play at Northampton's Iron Horse

By Brian Wood
Collegian Staff

Fans of facial hair, melodrama and downbeat country rejoice, Neva Dinova has returned from whereabouts unknown, and their bringing along Ladyhawk for the ride.

2004 was quite the year for Neva Dinova. Emerging from the heavily congested Omaha music scene, the band released a split album, their second formal release, with friend and fellow Omaha native Conor Oberst of Bright Eyes, titled "One Jug of Wine, Two Vessels." The band's three original selections, and guitarist/vocalist Jake Bellows' rendition of Oberst's "Spring Cleaning," greatly outshined anything their more popular counterpart offered on the record.

Within months the band transcended from regional obscurity to become part of the national conversation within the multiple genres touched by the band's folk-inspired indie rock sound. Quite a leap for a band that has been quietly creating music together, in some capacity, since the early '90s.

Capitalizing on the momentum of the split, the band followed with their second full length, "The Hate Yourself Change," in 2005, melding the stylistic elements they so expertly crafted on "Vessels" while adding a sense of dark humor and incorporating more electric instrumentation into some numbers.

The album explored a wide spectrum of sounds, delving from softer, downbeat, country-inspired numbers, like opener "Hat O'er Eyes," into more upbeat pieces with a sense of frantic urgency, as demonstrated on tracks such as "She Can't Change," and "A Picture in a Pocket." As the album concludes, Bellows and a chorus of friends sing in refrain over a backdrop of soothing instrumentation, "The world's a shitty place, and I can't wait to die," roughly a dozen times before fading into muffled sounds of joy. And with that uniformed proclamation, the band seemingly vanished without a word's notice.

In the two years that followed, not much was heard from the band. Bellows spent his time touring with Oberst in both 2006 and 2007 while also contributing to his latest album "Cassadaga." Drummer Roger Lewis also stayed occupied, creating music with his other band, The Good Life. Known by most as Cursive frontman Tim Kasher's side project, Lewis and the rest of The Good Life spent the past year releasing and touring in support of their latest album, "Help Wanted Nights." While new music was pouring out of Nebraska, Neva Dinova was nowhere to be found.

Perhaps the most troubling sign during this period was when the band's Web site ceased operation. In the wake of this, no word was ever officially released on the band's whereabouts or status. Fans were left in dark to wonder if they had heard the last of the band.

That is, until the collective sigh of relief came this January.

Omaha-based super label Saddle Creek Records announced they would be releasing Neva Dinova's newest and highly-anticipated full length in the spring and would be followed by a U.S. tour in support of the release, shortly thereafter. This news brought the band back into the national spotlight, and years worth of speculation were finally put to bed.

"You May Already Be Dreaming" was released April 4, some two years after Bellows began composing songs for it. In comparison to

See NEVA DINOVA on page 6

Jake Bellows of Neva Dinova open for Ladyhawk on Thursday in support of their new album.

Neva Dinova
May 8
Iron Horse
10 p.m.
$8/$10

Pulitzer Prize winner to speak on campus

By Shayna Murphy
Collegian Staff

Poets who talk about running over squirrels and combating restless leg syndrome aren't typically the ones you envision winning Pulitzer Prizes, but poet James Tate is hardly typical.

Tate, whose recent publications include "Memoir of the Hawk," (2002) "Return to the City of the White Donkeys" (2004) and the Pulitzer Prize-winning "Selected Poems," (1991) will read on campus this upcoming Thursday, as part of the Visiting Writers Series.

A professor of English at the University of Massachusetts, Tate is widely regarded as one of the preeminent voices in American poetry.

Distinctive for his slightly left of center approach, his penchant for the atypical first became apparent in his work, "The Lost Pilot" (1967). He explored free association and a method of "dream-like" trance writing, which would later go on to inform his style indefinitely. The collection is noted for its originality and irreverence.

Selected for the Yale Series of Young Poets, the work has helped usher in what has since been referred to as a new wave in American surrealism. But "The Lost Pilot" isn't all biting wit – pausing to make grim a reflection of a father lost in the collection's title poem, the work appears rife with autobiographical undertones.

In a recent interview with Cross Connect, Tate discussed the path undertaken following the early success of "The Lost Pilot."

"I got a lot of praise for that book and didn't listen to it – because people were saying you know, 'Write The Lost Pilot again, write The Lost Pilot again,' and I just knew better than that. I said, nope, that book is done and I'm going to try to do something else, as much as I can."

Doing something else became the act of teaching. Forging an unexpected career – first at UC Berkeley, then at the University of Massachusetts – Tate had this to say of his initial experiences in the lecture hall: "I was so young it was ridiculous, but I was trying to be a good teacher. I wasn't full of any self-importance – on the contrary, I was really uncomfortable and wanted out. I had never aspired to be an academic and didn't aspire to be one."

However, Tate's feelings changed soon thereafter. Retiring from his hometown Kansas City for Amherst in 1971, Tate built upon his repertoire with subsequent publications. Although a self-professed non-regionalist, the transfer to New England seemed to correlate with greater acclaim for the poet. His invitation to take part in the Visiting Writers Series

See TATE on page 6

James Tate
May 8
Memorial Hall
8 p.m.

Recent cancer study links mortality rates with race

BY BARBARA GRADY
THE OAKLAND TRIBUNE

OAKLAND, Calif. – African-American women are less likely to get breast cancer than white, Asian and Latina women, but once diagnosed with breast cancer, they are more likely to die from it.

According to the American Cancer Society, the number of women dying from breast cancer has steadily declined since 1990, thanks to earlier diagnosis and better treatment.

However, a 2008 study found that death rates among African-American women with breast cancer stopped declining in 26 states and, nationwide, there is a widening gap in the survival rate of breast cancer among African Americans versus white, Asian and Latina women.

The society also says the disparity is due to a later detection of cancer among African-American women, when the cancer already is advanced. It attributes the later detection to less access to health insurance, according to the American Cancer Society 2008 cancer statistics report.

In California, breast cancer hits 133 white women out of every 100,000 women and hits 118 black women of every 100,000.

Genetically, white women are the most disposed to cancer, followed by African-American women, while Asian and Latino women both have relatively low chances of getting breast cancer. Only 89 out of every 100,000 Asian and Latino women get breast cancer, respectively.

However, the death rate among women diagnosed with breast cancer is highest among black women, at 33.8 among 100,000, and second highest among white women, at 25 deaths per 100,000.

Asian and Hispanic women fare better than either white or African-American women. The death rate from breast cancer among Asian women is 12.6 out of every 100,000 and for Latina women, it's 16 out of every 100,000.

That stark reality – that afflicted African-American women are 36 percent more likely to die from the disease than white women – is what prompted the Northern California Cancer Center and the Women's Cancer Resource Center to organize a cancer awareness day for black women Saturday.

"We're trying to reach people who would not normally get a mammogram," said Pamela Ratliff, community education program manager for the Northern California Cancer Center. "We want to raise awareness of this disease among African-American women in the hope that information will empower them to be advocates about their health and make sound decisions about their health."

"African-American women often discover their own breast cancer because it is already advanced," said Ratliff, adding that if someone is able to discover a lump, it usually means the lump has been there a few years.

"Sometimes women are not able to go to the physician on a regular basis because of lack of health insurance," or the financial burden of going to see a doctor, she said. Other factors are "fear of the unknown," and not wanting to undergo mammograms.

During Saturday's conference, organizers hope not only to deliver health care advice, but to support

Poet and professor to read

TATE from page 5

is a testament to his acclaim.

The Visiting Writers Series is a nationally celebrated reading series sponsored by the MFA Program for Poets and Writers at UMass. For over 40 years, the series has sought to enrich the literary community on campus, drawing writers of fiction, non-fiction and poetry to events hosted during the academic year.

Recent participants in the Visiting Writers Series include writers Stephen Graham Jones and Yannick Murphy, as well as poet Alice Notley. Although none can claim the Pulitzer Prize laurel sported by Tate, each has gained their own recognition.

This Thursday's reading with James Tate will mark the final event of the series for the current semester. The event is open to the public and will kick off at Memorial Hall starting at 8 p.m.

Shayna Murphy can be reached at skmurphy@student.umass.edu.

James Tate, a UMass Professor and Pulitzer Prize winning poet will speak at Memorial Hall as a part of the Visiting Writer's Series.

Nebraskans back in action on Thursday

NEVA DINOVA from page 5

"The Hate Yourself Change," the new album possesses a real fluidity to it, with less pronounced shifts in sound between its 14 tracks. There are no moments like the aforementioned suicidal chorus, and the bits of humor laced throughout their previous works take a back seat on "Dreaming." But all the poeticism one expects from Bellows and the band's knack for melodrama are still dominantly present, and just as enjoyable as ever.

Neva Dinova is currently touring in support of Canadian indie rockers Ladyhawk, who similarly are on the road celebrating the release of their newest album "Shots," on Jagjaguwar Records. The bearded quartet's latest effort has received a substantial amount of positive press since its March 4 release, drawing comparisons of the band to Dinosaur Jr., among other heavyweights in the genre. Ladyhawk's penchant for heavier guitars and emphatic cymbal crashes should prove a nice counterbalance to Bellows' more subdued style of songwriting, providing listeners a mixture of everything on a night where audience members can expect just about anything.

Neva Dinova and Ladyhawk play Thursday, May 8 at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton. Doors open for the event at 10 p.m. and tickets are $8 in advance, $10 at the door.

Brian Wood can be reach at bjwood@student.umass.edu

Road warriors tour country uninvited

PARTY from page 5

encountered very little trouble and when we do, it's after 15 minutes or so, which usually equals three songs, and that is really all we need."

So far they have made stops at the Super Bowl, a handful of NCAA Tournament games, outside of some music festivals and in major cities such as New York and Boston.

"We were in Washington DC and got stopped by the Secret Service," said James. "The next day we set up in front of the Capital and played uninterrupted for an hour. I just kept looking around waiting to get arrested."

In some cases, authority has actually allowed them to set up.

"We set up in Faneuil Hall and a cop actually saw us, and just turned around," said James. "If he had come up to us he would have asked for permits and shut us down. He is the coolest cop ever."

To finance the tour, the band offers CDs and bumper stickers for donations.

"We sell merchandise at all of our concerts by donation only," said James. "When we get back to L.A. we are going to look for sponsorship, but right now it's going well. We have gotten a great response from everyone… except authority. It's funny how hard people with authority hold on to that authority."

This style of touring has helped them gain some national attention.

"We have been contacted by a couple major tours," said Garner. "The Warped Tour and MTV's Rock the Vote have gotten in touch with us. The head of the Warped Tour called us after seeing us play on the street."

The band has made it a point to seek out the local college radio and newspapers before they start playing.

"We were at a small college in North Carolina and just starting playing, and in between songs, some members of the newspaper showed up and wanted to know why we hadn't called them up first," said Garner. "Since then we just randomly walk into the radio stations and offer to do interviews on air whenever we can."

There is a political element to the show. At each stop, the band offers voter registration forms and lends their support to Democratic Candidate Barack Obama.

"If you haven't registered to vote, please come up and do so. If you have, vote for Barack Obama. We love you guys," Garner said in between songs to the small South by Southwest crowd.

"We started [the political aspect] when we were in California during the primaries and campaigning for Obama," said James.

They plan on continuing the tour until May 15, when they head back to Los Angeles, at which point they plan on regrouping, officially releasing "We Am One" and hitting the road again in August or September. The band plans on stopping in New York, before heading to Los Angeles, for one last show.

"We got a whopping $150 fine there for playing some park," Garner joked. "We're probably gonna stop there again."

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskil@dailycollegian.com

Lynn University students hosted a two hour therapy event Tuesday called "Paws and Relax." The event was aimed to relieve stress during the final weeks of school.

Students send collegiate stress straight to the dogs

BY SCOTT TRAVIS
SOUTH FLORIDA SUN-SENTINEL

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. – Students at Lynn University say they've been working like dogs to prepare for final exams. So who better to relieve some of that stress than a couple of four-legged friends?

Kelly and Charlie, two yellow lab and golden retriever-mixed canines, are therapy dogs who normally work with the sick and elderly at Boca Raton, Fla., Community Hospital, as well as special needs children at Royal Palm Beach (Fla.) Elementary School. Counselors at Lynn thought they might also be good to help students deal with test anxiety.

So they let the dogs out Tuesday for a two-hour therapy event on the university lawn, called "Paws and Relax."

"The end of the semester is typically a very stressful time," said Kirt McClellan, a psychotherapist at Lynn. "Pet therapy has been recognized to help increase coping skills and decrease stress."

A number of studies have touted the physical and psychological benefits of animals, according to abstracts posted on the Web site of the Delta Society, a nonprofit group that promotes the use of therapy animals.

Students at Lynn say the dogs do the trick.

"I was stressed out the entire day over finals, but the dogs came here, and I am totally stress free right now," said Avi Felberbaum, 19, of Livingston, N.J.

"When I'm around dogs, I don't have a care in the world," said Natalie Capiro, 20, of Boca Raton, who was stressed about an accounting exam coming up that day.

Kelly, 5, and Charlie, 4, belong to Tom DeCicco, owner of Boca Raton-based Therapy Dogs of South Florida. He's also training Harris, 2, a full golden lab, for therapy. Training starts at 10 weeks old to get the dogs fully socialized and able to stay calm under any circumstance, DeCicco said.

"For the short-term, they break up the monotony and seem to have a calming effect," he said.

While this is Kelly and Charlie's first time working with college students, pet therapy is nothing new for Lynn University. Last semester, the university brought in a petting zoo, complete with baby pigs, lemurs, chickens, ducks, goats, lambs and rabbits.

Therapy dogs have been used at other universities, including Albright College in Reading, Pa.; Indiana University in Bloomington; and the University of Wisconsin-Madison, according to published reports.

For Brittany Hutchinson, 20, of Venice, Fla., the visit by Kelly and Charlie turned into a reunion. She spent four weeks at Boca Raton Community Hospital last year for a ruptured appendix, and the two canines served as therapy pets for her.

"They were such a great help in getting me through that," she said. "It's nice to see them on a better occasion."

Looking for a Job?
The Daily Collegian
is seeking hard-working, motivated undergrads to fill our Advertising Representative Positions.
To Apply:
Contact Dan Hurley
or Brendan Cherry
@ 545-3500 for more information.
•Excellent business experience!
•Gain valuable sales experience
•Get credits for work
•Build your resume
•SOPH students strongly encouraged to apply.

SUMMER PARKING REGULATIONS

Faculty, staff and students with valid annual lot permits are eligible to park in any of the following lots, in addition to their assigned lot, effective May 27, 2008 to August 29, 2008. Red and Blue lots continue to be restricted during the Summer.

Green Lots	Purple Lots	Yellow Lots
25	22	11
26	44	12
33	49	13
34

Anyone who wishes to purchase permits, upgrade existing permits, or park in the Campus Garage for the summer, should contact Parking Services at 413/545-0065 or visit the website at http://parking.umass.edu

Bullpen depth plagues UM

BULLPEN from page 10

entered the game with a 3.89 earned run average in 37 innings.

Yesterday he struggled, but Eilenberg can't be expected to enter every game in a key situation and prevent inherited runners from scoring – it's just not possible.

He pitched four innings over the weekend, so fatigue may have been a factor as to why he wasn't as sharp as usual yesterday.

Bullpen depth has been a problem for the Minutemen this entire season. With the exception of Eilenberg, Charlie Benson has the next lowest ERA at 6.75. However, the team did enjoy a successful weekend before yesterday's game.

"I think we're starting to get more [depth] because [Aaron] Smith gave us a good 3 2/3 on Sunday – he pitched great," Stone said. "Nick Serino in relief pitched well today and on Sunday too as well.

"I feel better about it now than I did two weeks ago."

The bullpen did put together its best performance of the season against Dayton this past weekend. It limited the Flyers to one unearned run in 12 1/3 innings in the three games, a large part of why the team is still in contention for a spot in the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

Stone has used eight different starters this season and most of them have also seen time in the bullpen. Serino pitched four scoreless innings in Sunday's extra-inning victory but didn't pitch as well yesterday (three earned runs in three innings).

Consistency in the bullpen will be even more crucial now that starter Bryan Leigh is on rehab with a sore arm.

Leigh was inconsistent but often went late into games and now that he's unavailable, the number of starters to choose from is decreased, leaving fewer arms available in the bullpen.

A few of UMass's young hitters, specifically Kyle Multner, Brian Baudinet and Mike Donato (prior to his sprained ankle), have stepped up and made effective contributions, but multiple members of the young bullpen have struggled.

Freshman Garrett Butt has had a tough time adjusting to college baseball and has an ERA of 17 in nine innings pitched, while Charlie Benson and Zach Telgheder, also freshmen, also have high ERAs.

Smith, the lone senior on the staff, struggled early in the season but has recently shown signs of turning it around. He pitched well against Central Connecticut State before allowing two runs in his fourth inning and held Dayton scoreless for 3 1/3 innings on Sunday.

With two weekend series remaining, it will be vital for the Minutemen's bullpen to continue to grow. The team's seen only three complete games this season, so the relief corps will factor into the final two weekend series.

The team likely needs to win at least two of three games in both conference series to have any chance of qualifying for the A-10 Tournament, and the bullpen's performance could be the difference between making it or, similar to last year, failing to.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu

Nick Serino allowed three runs in three innings of relief yesterday. The freshman has mainly been starting this season but also came out of the bullpen this past weekend.

Three-run HR dooms UMass

BASEBALL from page 10

outfielder Mike Tamsin to score.

The next inning did not go any better for the M… Telgheder (four innings pitched, two runs, two … hit the first batter of the inning, Alex Fox, which … lowed by a double from third baseman Jamel Do…

With runners on second and third, Stone de… saw enough. He called on freshman Nick Serino … Telgheder with no outs.

"I just felt that three times through the … enough," Stone said. "His velocity wasn't quite … wanted it to be, but I thought it was a good … for them."

Serino got through the inning after … inherited runner to score, knotting the game … However, the next three batters grounded … the inning.

Porter hit a solo home run to right field with … in the sixth inning to give Northeastern its first … game at 3-2.

Husky reliever Dan Zehr took the mound in … enth inning but gave up two walks and a hit. … Ryan Franczek's single knocked in designated … Copa to tie the game.

Zehr (1-4, three saves) gave up his second … Macdonald and loaded the bases with two … Minutemen would not score another run that …

"We just didn't do a good job of staying … ball and seeing it really well," Stone said. "We … out too many times. I expected us to open … just didn't do it."

UMass had one more opportunity in the … after Franczek had his second run batted … but could not close the gap. Second … Tempesta grounded out to the shortstop … Franczek to third.

Husky reliever Bobby Carrington sealed … the final out, despite giving up the run.

UMass continues its A-10 schedule with a … series against Rhode Island May 9-11.

GAME NOTES

Outfielder Mike Donato has been out … ankle since the series against Charlotte. He … for the regular season but is a possibility for the … Tournament, if the Minutemen qualify. … Garrity stole second and reached third on … his second stolen base of the season.

Adam Miller can be reached at … umass.edu

Maroney named ROY

Bailey Sanders provided a solid second starter for Elaine Sortino's team this year. The sophomore finished the regular season with a 1.88 earned run average in 18 starts.

Balschmiter leads UMass in domination of A-10 awards

SOFTBALL from page 10

five homers and 27 RBIs.

Balschmiter also earned the A-10's Pitcher of the Year award for the third consecutive year, matching Danielle Henderson (1997-99) for the most by one player. UMass's Kaila Holtz (2002-03) and Kelly Daut (1994-95) are the only other players to win two.

Balschmiter also earned her first career USA Softball National Pitcher of the Week award for the final week of the regular season. The junior threw back-to-back no-hitters against Boston College and St. Bonaventure to finish the regular season. She has five no-hitters this season, including two perfect games; her 0.53 ERA is the lowest in the country.

Maroney, who may have been UMass coach Elaine Sortino's most pleasant surprise in 2008, caught fire in the second half of the season and earned the title of A-10 Rookie of the Year without playing the field.

The Minutewomen's DH batted .370 in her freshman campaign, tied for third-best in the conference and led the team in hitting through most of A-10 play (Serio eventually finished tops on the team at .383). Maroney hit four home runs and knocked in 23 RBIs. She was second on the team with a .605 slugging percentage and a .470 on-base percentage.

GAME NOTES

UMass ranks first in the Atlantic 10 in both hitting and pitching at the end of the regular season, batting .301 as a team (Fordham is second at .296), with an ERA of 0.96, more than a run better than St. Joe's, who was second at 2.06 … The Minutewomen also improved their team fielding in 2008, going from .953 in 2007 (fourth in the conference) to .968 this season, tied atop the league with Dayton.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

Good with computers? Need Experience?
Apply here!
The Daily Collegian is now hiring a Web Manager for the '08-'09 school year.
Primary duties include:
- Maintaining the Daily Collegian's website
- Placing online ads
- Supervising up to four web editors.
Training will be provided.
Required Skills:
- Comfortable with computers and general internet practices
- Thorough understanding of HTML and CSS
- Some knowledge of FTP or other file transfer protocols
- Some graphic knowledge and ability to work with the Adobe CS2/CS3 suite.
For more information, contact James Hale at jhale@dailycollegian.com or come down to the Collegian office in the Campus Center basement.

THE MASSSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS LOOKING FOR A
DAY AND NIGHT GRAPHIC STAFF

FOR MORE INFORMATION
VISIT THE COLLEGIAN OFFICE
IN THE BASEMENT OF THE CAMPUS CENTER

Lofton struggles to tell his story

By Beth Rucker
Associated Press

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Always the quietest member of Tennessee's basketball team, Chris Lofton managed to keep the biggest secret of his life from his teammates and fans during his senior season.

The former guard, who struggled with his shooting through the first half of the season, had been treated for cancer after a random drug test last year tipped off school officials he had a tumor.

Lofton told reporters the testicular cancer was the hardest thing that he's ever gone through and didn't want it to overshadow his teammates during what turned out to be a history-making season for the Vols.

He decided to reveal what he went through once he realized it might help other people.

"Sometimes I wanted to tell all my teammates, but I just couldn't get it out to them," Lofton said Friday before the team's end-of-season banquet. "I thought keeping it to myself for the whole season and waiting until after the season to say it would be better."

Beating cancer was the hardest thing the Maysville, Ky., native has ever gone through, but it's certainly changed him.

For one thing, Lofton – who admits he's a man of few words and often shies from the media as a player – doesn't seem to struggle to talk about the treatments, which weakened him so much last summer that he didn't work out or shoot a basketball until just weeks before the season started.

It's also put basketball in perspective for the shooter, whose 431 3-point shots lead the SEC and rank third in NCAA history.

"It used to be that a bad game was the end of the road for me. When I went through my cancer, I realized basketball is fun but it's not that big of a deal," Lofton said.

A drug test he was randomly selected for during the 2007 NCAA tournament indicated potential steroid use or cancer.

Coach Bruce Pearl said NCAA officials believed something was genuinely wrong with Lofton, rather than accusing him of steroid use, and allowed him to play through the tournament.

Tennessee officials didn't tell him and his family of the test results until hours after the Vols lost to Ohio State in the NCAA regional semifinal.

He underwent surgery March 28, six days after the loss, and began a month of radiation treatments a few weeks later.

Lofton, The Associated Press' SEC player of the year as a junior and a second-team All-American, usually was the first one in the gym to take shots before practice, and he would stay late for more work. But there were days during the summer when he couldn't even get out of bed because of the nausea and pain from radiation treatment – something he didn't expect.

He was a preseason All-American going into his senior season but started off in a shooting slump.

Pearl gave several reasons for Lofton's slump during the season: His shot wasn't falling, the team had more offensive balance than before, Lofton was contributing in other ways.

Pearl says now that everything he said was true, but he always knew that part of the reason could be that Lofton wasn't 100 percent physically or mentally. He just couldn't tell anyone that.

"Chris didn't want it to be a distraction to his teammates, therefore he didn't tell his teammates," Pearl said. "And he certainly didn't want an excuse if he wasn't playing quite as well as the year before."

The questions about Lofton's play from fans and reporters certainly bothered the senior, Pearl said.

The team finally got to a point about halfway through the season where Pearl knew Lofton needed to take more shots and find better ways to get open. So he told Lofton he needed more to keep the team from losing and immediately saw a difference.

"You push the team button with Chris Lofton, and everything else is a moot point. He was then able to push everything else aside," he said.

COURTESY MCT

Chris Lofton virtually told no one he had cancer until recently.

Lofton finished the season leading Tennessee in scoring with 15.5 points per game, though it was a drop from his 20.8 average the previous season. He was picked as a third-team All-American.

Pearl said he's fielded a number of calls and e-mails from fellow coaches, fans and cancer survivors telling him what an inspiration Lofton is.

"I've never coached a player who's faced so much adversity and put it aside," Pearl said.

"Chris is rare."

–Scott Feldman

Pozar, Boney head A-10 list

Being named to an all-conference team is an honor for any athlete but sometimes what it means can be very different. For senior captain Masha Pozar, it is the culmination of a long and successful career, while for freshman Candynce Boney, it is a sign of achievements yet to come.

The two members of the Massachusetts tennis team have been named to the Atlantic 10's All-Conference first team. The voting was conducted by the conference's head coaches after the conclusion of the A-10 tournament.

Boney and Pozar were the top two singles players on the team this year, helping lead the Minutewomen to the number one seed in the conference tournament.

Pozar and Boney also formed the top doubles pairing on the squad, leading the team in victories as a pair. With Boney as her partner, Pozar broke the school record for most doubles victories with 74 wins, 24 of which came this season.

Boney led the team in singles victories, finishing with a record of 18-10. She also won five A-10 Rookie of the Week awards and two A-10 Player of the Week awards. Pozar ended with a 16-14 singles record, with 66 career wins, falling one victory shy of tying Michelle Spiess' career singles record of 67.

–Scott Feldman

McNamee hoping lawsuit is dismissed

The seven-time Cy Young Award winner has recently undergone much scrutiny in the media for questions about his past.

CLEMENS from page 10

cal obligations to Andy Pettitte seriously and will continue to do so in the future," Roden said in a statement issued by spokesman Patrick Dorton.

Richard Emery, one of McNamee's lawyers, has repeatedly said Hardin was selecting legal strategies that were assisting McNamee's cause.

"Many people have told me that I was silly to file this motion because Rusty is my best friend. And now he's going to have a chance to prove his friendship," Emery said.

Jay Reisinger, Pettitte's lawyer, declined comment.

Ellison also gave Clemens' attorneys 20 days to respond to McNamee's motion to dismiss the lawsuit.

McNamee is arguing the lawsuit should be dismissed on grounds that his statements to baseball investigator George Mitchell were protected by "absolute immunity" through a deal McNamee struck with federal prosecutors.

A seven-time Cy Young Award winner and 354-game winner, Clemens is under investigation by the FBI after denying McNamee's claims while under oath during a deposition and public testimony before a congressional committee.

The Daily News reported last week that Clemens had a decade-long relationship with country star Mindy McCready that began when she was 15 and an aspiring singer. The newspaper also linked him to former Manhattan bartender Angela Moyer and Paulette Dean Daly, a former wife of champion golfer John Daly.

On Monday, Clemens apologized for unspecified mistakes in his personal life.

Clemens denied having an affair with a 15-year-old but didn't specifically address whether he had a romance with McCready.

Bryant wins first MVP award

Paul, Garnett, James round out top four vote getters

By John Nodel
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Finally, an MVP award for Kobe Bryant.

Regarded as the NBA's best player for several years but never its most valuable, Bryant earned the honor at last on Tuesday after leading the Los Angeles Lakers to the best record in the Western Conference.

He called the award a blessing and an honor and emphasized that he wants another trophy this year.

"It's Hollywood, it's a movie script. The perfect ending would be for us to hold a championship trophy at the end of it," Bryant said at a news conference attended by his teammates, club officials, his wife and two daughters.

"This is an award I couldn't have won on my own. I can't thank these guys (his teammates) enough. These are my guys, these are my brothers. Let's get ready for tomorrow."

The Lakers try to take a 2-0 lead against Utah in their conference-semifinal on Wednesday night. Bryant will receive the MVP trophy from commissioner David Stern before the game.

Bryant entered the season as the league's two-time defending scoring champion. He had finished as high as third in the MVP voting twice – after the 2002-03 season, when he averaged 30 points for the first time, and last year when Dallas' Dirk Nowitzki won.

"I don't know anybody who's ever deserved this trophy more. I don't know anybody who's ever worked as hard to accomplish what he's accomplished," said Lakers coach Phil Jackson, who had five-time MVP Michael Jordan with Chicago and was at the Lakers' helm when Shaquille O'Neal won the award in 2000.

Bryant received 82 first-place votes and 1,105 points in the media vote. He was followed by New Orleans' Chris Paul (28 and 889), Boston's Kevin Garnett (15 and 670) and Cleveland's LeBron James (1 and 438).

"I've said since two, three years ago that Kobe Bryant is the best player in the league," James said before the Cavaliers faced the Celtics in Game 1 of their Eastern Conference semifinal series. "He's been the best player the last five, six years. I'm glad he won it. His team had a great year, finishing first in the West."

This season there was no denying the Lakers' 6-foot-6 star. Los Angeles rose to the top of the West despite key injuries and following Bryant's trade demands last spring when his team was eliminated in the first round by Phoenix for the second straight year.

Bryant averaged 28.3 points, 6.3 rebounds, 5.4 assists and 1.84 steals while playing all 82 games despite tearing a ligament in his right pinkie in February. He put off surgery until after the Olympics.

The knock on the 29-year-old Bryant had been that he didn't make those around him better – not anymore.

"He's deserving in this particular season with all of the question marks and everything going on coming into the season and the uncertainty," teammate Derek Fisher said. "Not only did he statistically have an MVP type of season, everybody can reasonably say they were better this year because of what he did. He met the so-called criteria, elevating his teammates' games."

Word leaked last Friday night that Bryant had won the award.

Bryant, second in the NBA in scoring behind James, is the first Laker to win the MVP award since O'Neal. Other Lakers to win since the award was first presented in 1956 were Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and Magic Johnson – each times. Abdul-Jabbar also won three with Milwaukee.

"I didn't expect this award would come to me," Bryant said. "I'm surprised. I've played pretty well in other seasons. Our team hasn't been as good. Things just fell into place."

Bryant and O'Neal led the Lakers to three consecutive championships, from 2000-02, and a berth in the finals in 2004. The Lakers hadn't won a playoff series since until sweeping Denver in the first round last month.

Bryant and O'Neal were often at odds during their eight years together. Assistant coach Brian Shaw, who played for the Lakers from 1999-03, has noticed a big difference in Bryant.

"He's a much better teammate now than he was in the championship days. That's a credit to his maturation. There were definitely times when he was not a good teammate. No one worked harder than he did. The same is true today," Shaw said.

Kobe Bryant won his first Most Valuable Player award yesterday. The shooting guard led his team to the number-one seed in the Western Conference.

SPRING SIDEWALK SALE
20%-80% savings
4 Days Only!
Wednesday, May 7-Saturday, May 10

ZANNA
Women's Clothing, Shoes and Accessories
Spring Sidewalk Sale at our Amherst store only.

Got trash?
Dump your apartment cleanout garbage in the right place:

The Amherst Transfer Station
Accepts trash, furniture, mattresses, books, TVs, computers & appliances, etc. Disposal fees apply
Bring your student ID to get in!
Open 8am-2pm Tuesday, Thursday, & Saturday
740 Belchertown Road (Route 9)
2 miles East of Dunkin Doughnuts
For more information, visit www.amherstma.gov/recycling
Or call the Amherst Department of Public Works 413-259-3050

Apartments Available for Summer and Fall

Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
PUFFTON VILLAGE
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Seven O's
EVERY WEDNESDAY
KARAOKE
* * * * * *
LIVE BANDS
THURSDAY, 5/8/08
GHOST QUARTET
FRIDAY, 5/9/08
WOLFMAN CONSPIRACY
SATURDAY, 5/10/08
4 ON THE FLOOR
LOOKING FOR EXPOSURE?
STUDENT BANDS WELCOME TO PLAY AT SEVEN O'S
LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO HAVE A PRIVATE EVENT/PARTY?
CALL 413-530-6996
ROUTE 116, 330 AMHERST RD SUNDERLAND, MA 01375 (413) 665-8788
3 PM TO 1 AM M-F
1 PM TO 1 AM SAT&SUN
NEXT TO CLIFFSIDE APTS.

Happy May 7!

	3		4	8	2
		3			1	6
6			1
9	8			2		3
		4	6
2	7				6	5
		8			3
6	5		7
	7	4	6		5

ACROSS
1 Toothpaste holder
5 Andy's partner
9 Exclude
14 Small songbird
15 Starlet's quest
16 Writer Zola
17 Sacred bird of ancient Egypt
18 Guilty or not guilty
19 Rice dish
20 Eyetooth
22 Place officials
24 United Kingdom part
26 Revise, as text
27 Duck down
29 Display
33 In great demand
36 Red Square figure
38 January in Barcelona
39 Cassowary cousins
41 Sofa
43 Get ahead
44 Aquatic plant
46 Office notes
48 "Nature" network
49 Misgivings
51 Invoice word
53 Oliver's request
55 Manages
59 Fabric
63 Fox of the Sox
64 Frighten
65 Casa chamber
67 Drink garnish
68 Actress Hope
69 QED part
70 Middle Eastern ruler
71 Had affection for 72 Miami's county
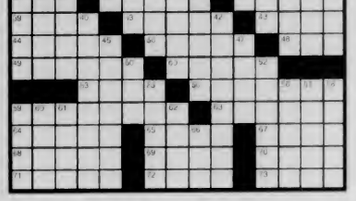
73 Cincinnati nine

DOWN
1 Doubly
2 Metropolitan
3 Existence
4 Store fodder
5 Added on
6 ___ de mer
7 Misjudged and baurble
8 Assert
9 Dispossess
10 Giving off
11 Digestive fluid
12 Banned apple spray
13 NFL zebras
21 Brad or spike
23 Lemon drink
25 Jeans material
28 Mississippi or Missouri
30 Lowest high tide
31 Baby's bed
32 Long, long time periods
33 Embraced
34 "Typee" continuation
35 Ballerina's skirt
37 Designated
40 Go under
42 Propose as a candidate
45 Raged
47 Address for a king
50 ___ Lanka
52 Penn's partner
54 Let off pressure
56 Weather of a region, so to speak
57 Shy
58 Tarot users
59 Shoppers' milieu
60 Jai
61 Armored vehicle
62 Zhivago's beloved
66 Shaveling

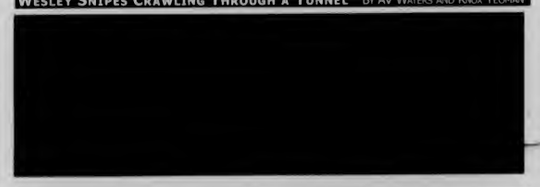
Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM



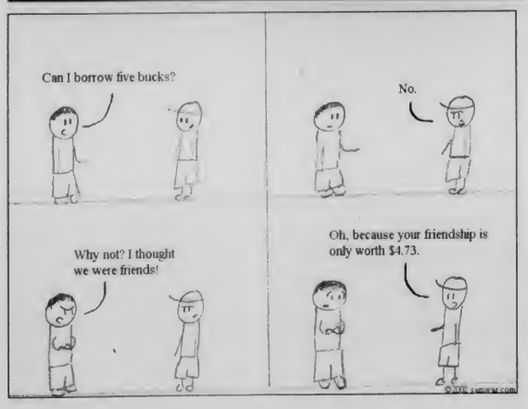
CAPTION CONTEST!

Submit captions and see the picture in color at:
www.dailycollegian.com/caption

QUOTE OF THE DAY



"Punctuality is the virtue of the bored."
— Evelyn Waugh



WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Kid Shay

WESLEY SNIPES CRAWLING THROUGH A TUNNEL By AV Waters and Knox Yeoman

THE VALUE OF FRIENDSHIP By Tom Frink

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Your presence on this campus is even more delightful than delicious fruity slush in the DC.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Your friend may be acting like an annoying sack of sorries, but it's only because you're being an enabler.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Sometimes the grown-ups need to make the decisions.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Um volesequamet nis nulla faccummy num ipsusciliqui er adiat vullamc ons. Translate.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You're more of an oddball than a prolate spheroid. Try dating a rugby player.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
In some circles, all it takes is a broken ankle and suddenly you're being euthanized.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
It's not enough to know a lot about jaguars, you must be able to translate that knowledge into multiple languages.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Eleven messages in a row from the same person? Sounds like you've got a cable guy.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
It's called same-sex, but really the ins and outs of it require a whole different approach.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Strive to be the type of pal that let's somebody know when an entire broccoli tree has lodged itself into their gumline.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
In terms of eating, sour dill pickles are the best, but in terms of personality try being a sweet baby gherkin.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
It's not the size of the phone that makes you worth calling, it's where you're willing to stick that phone when it's set to vibrate.

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach
Summer Session 2008
KICK off your Summer right!!!
Catch up- get ahead or explore your curiosity
Session I June 2 - July 10
Session II July 14 - Aug 20
REGISTER NOW!
UMassULearn.net

Admit it, you're cheating on your BF with the comics page. That's a little weird, but whatever wets your whistle...

comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENT

Meeting Notice
Top of Campus, Incorporated (TOC, Inc.) will hold its Annual Meeting in Campus Center 802, Wednesday, May 28, 2008 at 12:00 p.m.

APT FOR RENT

Cliffside Apartments. 2 Bedroom apt for sublet/ rent beginning June 1st. $915/mo. ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED. Directly on bus route. Contact: rploof@student.umass.edu

6/1. 2 bedroom, free couch, recliner, cables, bedframes. $1100/mo. Contact: gware@student.umass.edu

Center of Town, 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

APT FOR RENT

.Townhouse #32 for rent. Lease starting June 1st. Right near bus stop. Partially furnished. New appliances installed. New kitchen floor, 3 bedroom. 1.5 bathroom. $1500 a month. contact dexter@student.umass.edu

For 9/1/08. Northampton. 2 Bedrooms $825+ 3 Bedrooms $1025+ 4 Bedrooms $1225+ 6 Bedrooms $1500+ 584-4920 or 253-7436

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

AMHERST, Mill Valley Estates Limited Time Offer, $1000 Off Your Move-In Costs! 2 bedroom $1175, 3 bedroom $1475, 4 bedroom $2225 includes heat/hot water, air, washer/dryer hookups, dishwasher and 2 full baths. Now Renting for Summer & Fall 2008! Call now 413-253-7377, email: millvalleyestates@winnco.com

APT FOR RENT

Townhouse Apt. 49 for rent $1500 a month lease starts 6/1
Contact Rmelvill@student.umass.edu

Subletting Puffton for the Summer! Ax about me! 508-335-0seven7seven Pretty cheap.

EMPLOYMENT

Drivers WANTED apply at D.P. Dough downtown Amherst.

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available immediately. Only those able to work the upcoming summer should apply. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call 413-584-4746 or nfo@idealmovers.com

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

As part of our expansion program, our company is looking for part time Work from home account managers and sales representatives, it pays $500 a month plus benefits and takes only little of your time. Please contact us for more details. Requirements-should be a computer literate 2-3 hours access to the internet weekly. Must be over 19yrs of age. Must be efficient and dedicated. If you are interested and need more information, Contact Dan Frank. (dan.frank39@yahoo.com)

EMPLOYMENT

FOR SALE

Twin bed (brand new), computer desk & chair, dresser. Each can be sold individually or in a package. Email for more info: dexter@student.umass.edu

GENERAL

INK & TONER CARTRIDGES
30-80% LESS
ECO-FRIENDLY
AMHERST 413-548-9905
NORTHAMPTON
413-517-0099

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 Bedroom+ newer home, 2 full baths, laundry hook-ups, large yard, close to UMass Contact (413) 549-4270

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test.233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, MAY 7, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Freshman pitcher Zach Telgheder allowed two runs in four innings in his first collegiate start. The Minutemen fell to the Huskies 6-4 at Earl Lorden Field yesterday.

Minutemen drop game vs. Huskies

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

It looked like the Massachusetts baseball team would break the door open to break a 3-3 tie against Northeastern with the bases loaded in the bottom of the seventh inning and two outs. That opportunity was gone when first baseman Andy Tuetken grounded to third on a fielder's choice.

NU	6
UMass	4

The Huskies (20-22-1, 10-14-1 Colonial Athletic Association) had a similar opportunity with runners on first and second and nobody out, except they did break the door open. Designated hitter Frank Pesanello hit a three-run home run to break the game open, 6-3.

UMass (16-22, 9-12 Atlantic 10) fought back in the ninth inning, but couldn't make up for the eighth inning home run, losing 6-4.

"We should've won the ball game but we didn't do enough offensively," UMass coach Mike Stone said.

The Minutemen started the game with a double to right center by third baseman Jim Macdonald to knock in the first run. Tuetken then drove Macdonald in with a single down the left field line to give UMass a 2-0 lead.

In his first start, starting pitcher Zach Telgheder held down Northeastern until the fourth inning. The Huskies got their first run of the game after senior Josh Porter singled through the right side to allow

See BASEBALL on page 7

Bullpen will play key role in crucial games ahead

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

With Northeastern runners on first and second base with no outs in the eighth inning, Massachusetts baseball coach Mike Stone removed Nick Serino from the game and brought in Mitchell Eilenberg, his most consistent relief pitcher this season.

One pitch later he may have regretted that decision.

In dramatic fashion, Frank Pesanello broke the Huskies' single-season home run mark when he took Eilenberg's pitch deep over the left-field fence to break a 3-3 tie and put his team ahead for good.

It was the designated hitter's 16th home run of the season, and perfectly illustrated the hullpen's struggles this season.

While the relief pitchers have struggled, one bright spot has been Eilenberg. The junior

See BULLPEN on page 7

Clemens allowed to keep lawyer Hardin in defamation suit

By Juan A. Lozano
Associated Press

HOUSTON (AP) — A federal judge ruled Tuesday that Roger Clemens can keep his lawyer in the defamation lawsuit against his former trainer, who accused the pitcher of using performance-enhancing drugs.

Lawyers for Clemens' former trainer, Brian McNamee, filed a motion for attorney Rusty Hardin to be removed from the case because Hardin represented both Clemens and pitcher Andy Pettitte for several days before the release of the Mitchell Report in December.

McNamee said both Clemens and Pettitte used performance enhancing drugs. After the report's release, Pettitte admitted he used human growth hormone but Clemens has steadfastly denied using any performance-enhancing substances and in January filed a defamation suit against McNamee.

Pettitte later told congressional lawyers that Clemens informed him nearly a decade ago he had used HGH. Clemens claims Pettitte "misremembers."

McNamee's attorney had argued that Hardin should be removed from the case because there could be a conflict of interest. In defending Clemens, Hardin could attack the credibility of Pettitte, his one-time client, or use privileged information against him, McNamee's attorneys said. Hardin denied those claims.

In a 13-page opinion, U.S. District Judge Keith P. Ellison ruled that since McNamee is not a former client of Hardin, he has no standing to ask for his disqualification. Only Pettitte would be able to make such a challenge and he has chosen not to at this time, Ellison wrote.

"The court is certain that today's decision will not shake the public's confidence in the legal system, especially since Pettitte can come forward to object to Hardin's representation himself if he is truly aggrieved."

Joe Roden, a lawyer at Hardin's law firm, called it a "thoughtful and well-reasoned opinion."

"We have always taken our ethi-

See CLEMENS on page 8

A federal judge ruled on Tuesday that Roger Clemens could keep his lawyer, Rusty Hardin in his demation suit against Brian McNamee.

UMass tries for another title

Minutewomen to face winner of La Salle–Fordham

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

After sweeping through the Atlantic 10 during the regular season to finish with a perfect 20-0 record, the No. 20 Massachusetts softball team needs just three more wins to be crowned A-10 Champions for the fourth straight season and 20th in the last 24 years.

The A-10 Tournament begins today at 2 p.m. at the 49ers Softball Diamond in Charlotte, N.C., with fourth-seeded Fordham facing fifth-seeded Saint Joseph's. The winner of that game will play UMass tomorrow at the same time. The Minutewomen (35-11) earned the top overall seed and a bye in the first round.

UMass Softball

Game two pits third seed and host-team Charlotte against Saint Louis, which rounds out the bracket in the sixth spot. The winner of that game moves on to face No. 2 St. Bonaventure, who also received a first-round bye. Because of the double-elimination format, the losers of Games 1 and 2 will meet at 6 p.m. today in the losers' bracket, meaning one team be ousted on the first day of the tournament.

Round three will take place on Friday with another three games, and the championship is schedule for Saturday at noon. The team departed Amherst at 2 p.m. yesterday.

Possible second-round opponents

Whoever wins Game one of the A-10 Tournament is granted the dubious task of facing the team who hasn't lost a conference game in more than two years in the second round. Fordham (33-28, 11-9 A-10) has been UMass's closest competitor for the last several years, even claiming the regular season crown in 2005 (the Minutewomen won the tournament that year), and the Rams will get another shot at the defending conference champions if they can get past the Hawks (18-21, 11-9 A-10).

Fordham had a shot to claim a first-round bye in the final weekend of the season, but got swept by La Salle, which still finished three games out of the playoffs. With the final spot in the tourney already clinched, the Hawks split their final regular-season series with the 49ers.

The Rams and Hawks split their season series, with St. Joe's winning the first game, 6-5, and Fordham taking the rematch, 3-1 in 10 innings.

The Hawks finished 2008 below .500 overall, but boast the conference's third-best pitcher in Dani Gonzales (11-10, 1.61 ERA) and the A-10 Player of the Year Brooke Darrell, who finished head-and-shoulders above the rest of the league offensively, with a .472 batting average (fourth best in the nation). She is also ninth nationally in on-base percentage (.550), reaching base safely in 36 of 39 games this year.

UMass is a perfect 4-0 against the two teams last year and has a total of seven losses against the Rams and Hawks all time, with a 34-2 mark against Fordham and 46-5 against Saint Joseph's.

Junior Brandice Balschmiter and the Minutewomen need just three more wins to claim their fourth straight Atlantic 10 Tournament.

UM dominates yearly awards

The Atlantic 10's All-Conference team and yearly awards were released yesterday, with eight Minutewomen named to the first or second team. First baseman Sarah Reeves, third baseman Whitney Mollica, centerfielder Carly Normandin, designated hitter Lindsay Maroney and pitcher Brandice Balschmiter earned All-Conference first team honors, while shortstop Whitney Williams, left fielder Lauren Proctor and catcher Jessica Serio were named to the second team.

After playing sparingly as a freshman, Reeves quickly became one of the Minutewomen's power-hitters at the plate, leading the team in home runs (eight) and finishing second in RBIs (34). Her .991 fielding percentage is also best among Minutewoman infielders. Mollica may be the Maroon and White's comeback player of the year after falling off offensively as a sophomore in 2007; she finished 2008 with a .336 batting average,

See SOFTBALL on page 7

DANCE COMES ALIVE AT MT. HOLYOKE | PAGE 8

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

RAIN : HI: 76 LO: 46 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, MAY 8, 2008

Robinson named new SGA speaker

By Mike Fox
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association introduced Shaun Robinson as its new speaker of the Student Government Association senate, and Cheryl Feinstein as associate speaker at its senate meeting last night.

Robinson defeated senator Devin Ashe, who ran for SGA president this spring. Robinson's campaign focused on his experience as an organizer and activist on campus, having served as the interior chair of the ALANA caucus for the past year. He focused on the need for the senate to overcome periods of stagnation and he promised not represent just students of color, but the entire student body.

"I look forward to obtaining sustainable progress in the senate that will continue even after I am done," Robinson said. "I want to help encourage the fact that service and work can be benefits in themselves."

Ashe focused on his experience as a senator and his experience with managing large groups during the 'Humans vs. Zombies' game. He also claimed that he would do a good job remaining neutral during senate debates.

Feinstein, who ran unopposed, offered her experience serving as a senator on the finance committee and her organization skills as her qualifications for the positions.

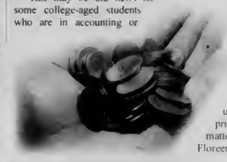
"I look forward to serving the senate, helping people to convey their ideas and pass motions to help the entire student body," Feinstein said.

For current SGA leadership, the elections mark a new era for the body.

"I am very excited to work with Shaun," SGA president Malcolm Chu said. "I have had the pleasure of working with him in the past and I know that he will bring a very powerful presence and energy to the senate. I look forward to working together with him and making this year the best."

"I am very excited for the transition," speaker Carla Dominguez added. "I am hopeful for the new direction of the senate. I am sad to leave the position, but I am glad that I am leaving it in capable hands."

Mike Fox can be reached at mgfox@student.umass.edu.



Students learn personal finance skills

Mass Bankers warn against spending, encourage saving

By Kim Beson
Collegian Correspondent

Want to know how to become a millionaire? If at the age of 25, you begin depositing 286 dollars every month into a Roth Individual Retirement Account at the average rate of nine percent, by the age of 65 you will have accumulated one million dollars, ready for your retirement enjoyment.

This may be old news for some college-aged students who are in accounting or finance fields, or who have financially savvy parents. But the majority of college students have little financial education or experience. That is why interns at the Massachusetts Bankers Association are hosting financial presentations around the UMass Amherst campus.

Grade schools offer health education and home economics, but financial education programs are slim to none. The Mass Bankers interns want to educate students on campus about managing and saving their money, starting a budget and using credit cards to avoid debt.

"Alcohol can get people into trouble, but misuse of money and inappropriate ignorance on financial matters can also," said David Floreen, Senior Vice President of Government Affairs and Trust Services at Mass Bankers.

The presentation warns students about frivolous spending because it adds up. They recommend resisting that Dunkin' Donuts coffee each morning and learning how to cook instead of eating out each weekend.

"Weekday coffees can add up to $400 a year," notes "Your 5-Minute Guide to Money in Your 20s," an MSN money article.

Additionally, it is estimated that college students nationwide spend about five and a half billion dollars each year on alcohol, said the Mass Bankers interns.

Arash Hashemi, a UMass junior involved in the workshop said, "I always see students wasting money, and I figured if I didn't put it aside I'd spend it on some random stuff."

So instead, he put his money to good use. Hashemi began a Roth Individual Retirement Account when he was 18, financed by what he saved from returning beer bottles and collecting pocket change. In one year, he saved $270 toward his future.

Hashemi acknowledges that retirement is not a part of the typical college student's vocabulary. But when it comes to saving, young people have time on their side. This rings true when it comes to Roth IRAs. If an 18-year-old opens a Roth account and puts 10 dollars in it each month at a nine percent rate, then by age 65, that money will have accumulated to $149,879.

Devlin Man, a Mass Bankers intern and UMass junior, started his IRA when he was 18. He has also invested in stocks. He confesses to being the person who picks pennies off the ground.

"I have this weird obsession with money," Man said.

Not all college students do. According to a Perspective survey from the Investment Company Institute, a national association of U.S. investment companies, in 2004 only 19 percent of people younger than the age of 35 have an IRA. This low percentage is unlikely to have changed over the course of the last four years, added Hashemi.

The average college student does not invest in an individual retirement account because of such common costs as books, tuition, loans and weekend spending.

"That's 40 years away. 40 years to a 23-year-old is never-never land and it is hard to grasp," said Floreen.

"They want their money now," Man added.

Social Security played a factor in Hashemi and Man starting IRAs. They believe the program is becoming "obsolete." However, both UMass Amherst finance professor Ben Branch and Floreen have a more optimistic outlook, believing it will withstand any troubles.

"Social Security is running out of money in a sense, but the government is not simply going to let that system fail," Branch said. "They will come up with the money because it is too popular a program."

However, Social Security is not enough to live on, and most people have to supplement, said Branch. Most financial advisors say it can take 75 to 85 percent of your pre-tax annual income to maintain a comfortable lifestyle. Companies who have pension plans are cutting them back.

See FINANCE on page 3

UMass slides into Charlotte for A-10 Tournament

Junior outfielder Samantha Solato and the Minutewomen look to clinch the 20th Atlantic 10 Tournament Championship in program history. The team is riding a 26-game winning streak and finished the regular season undefeated in A-10 play. UMass begins its quest this morning against Fordham. See full coverage on Page 14.

Controversy surrounds patriotic event

Amherst plans to alter Fourth of July parade structure in '09

By Caitlin Quinn
Collegian Staff

A private citizen's group, which has run Amherst's Fourth of July parade since 2002, is angry that the Town of Amherst's decision to hold a similar event may force them out.

The town established a parade because the citizen's group has prohibiting signs "protesting various actions by government," according to a recent press release.

The private organization, which referred to itself as the July Fourth Parade Committee, according to the Amherst Bulletin, still plans to hold a parade in 2009. However, they face an obstacle: the permit the town has taken out extends from the morning to the evening of that day.

"The town is saying they need nine hours, they're trying to box us out," said Larry Kelley, a member of the organization.

Town Manager Laurence Shaffer says the organization can still get a permit for its own parade on that day, or even collaborate with the town.

"They have put in a request, and there is more than one street," he said. "This is not about preventing their parade, it's about allowing ours. If they have a different street in town or a different time, we will be happy to look at it."

Shaffer, who introduced the change at the Select Board's meeting on April 23, says that since coming into office in 2006, he has received complaints from groups unable to "carry signs that are political in nature."

"There has been a steady drumbeat. I've met with the local Democratic Party, the local Republican Party, Sage and the League of Women Voters. They could march in the parade, but couldn't carry signs," explained Shaffer.

Kelley says it is within their rights as a private group to be restrictive about the participation in their parade so that it serves their intended purpose.

"We revived it in 2002, months after 9/11, to celebrate Independence Day, but also to honor firemen, policemen and the military," he said. "Amherst is so political 365 days a year. Why don't you have one hour that day to drop the politics?"

Kelley added that the organization has not turned down any groups from participating, including those based around a political idea, such as Vietnam Veterans Against the War. They have clarified their rules to say that groups can carry only one designating sign each, to avoid individuals with political protest signs.

"It's about abortion, it's about gay rights, it's about beating seals," he said. "We're just not going to have politics period. We're going to celebrate the birth of our country."

Controversy surrods Amherst's Fourth of July parade, as the current event raises questions of free speech.

Shaffer argued that "the organization seems to be the antithesis of what the Fourth of July is all about," because it causes citizens to feel they "cannot express themselves on July 4, which is the nation's independence day, the day it celebrates freedom, the founding spirit of the country."

According to the Springfield Republican, Select Board member Stephanie J. O'Keeffe asked for a meeting to discuss the issue in the near future.

Kelley would be prepared to take further steps in order to insure the private organization gets their parade.

"I'm 100 percent positive that if this goes to litigation we will win. The First Amendment protects from government intrusion," he said. "We will be running a parade in 2009."

Shaffer is confident as well.

"On the Fourth of July, citizens will be able to carry signs."

Caitlin Quinn can be reached at cquinn@student.umass.edu.

Seminar discusses value of testing

By Katherine Neubert
Collegian Staff

Teachers and educators gathered with community members on Monday night at a seminar to argue the benefits of standardized tests on children and high school-aged teens.

The discussion, led by Stephen G. Sireci, was entitled "Educational Testing: The Good, The Bad and The Ugly Unanswered Questions."

Sireci himself is not an educator, but rather a psychometrician, someone who refers to the measurement of an individual's attributes and characteristics. He began his lecture with the popular acknowledgement that most people don't like to take tests. He then showed a slide of students drawing themselves taking the MCAS (Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System) the drawings depicted the MCAS as something "evil."

What sparked Sireci's interest in the topic of testing started when he saw an MCAS bumper sticker while driving home to Northampton one day. It said "These tests hurt kids."

"How do these test hurt kids, and why?" Sireci asked, as he described his motivation for studying the subject.

Teachers in the audience expressed their particular like for the MCAS and other state tests, saying that it gives teachers structure, whereas before, there was none.

Sireci continued to explore the question, "Are educational tests inherently evil?"

He showed some modern tests and their history, like Alfred Binet's (1904) Intelligence Test helping to educate children in Paris, and the SAT, designed to select college applicants, with the original idea to select students based on merit.

"Tests need to measure the curriculum teachers are teaching," added Sireci. "Good educators know the value of good testing."

Sireci showed examples of all sorts of tests for getting into college, obtaining licenses and finding careers.

Sireci then showed a study he did with his 11-year-old son, evaluating his report card from the Bridge Street Elementary School in Northampton.

He asks important questions about testing. "Have state-mandated standardized tests done more good than harm? Have they made a difference?"

Sireci believes that if we teach to the test, it is the same as teaching to the curriculum. If we set high standards, students will meet them.

Some of the teachers in the audience discussed their experiences and concerns about the time the tests are administered in relation to when they are given back.

He also touched upon achievement gaps, negative aspects and how to prepare students so not to provoke anxiety before tests.

Katherine Neubert can be reached at kneubert@student.umass.edu.

Get the enV2 and see what it can do!

enV2™ by LG $129.99 after rebate

LG VX9100 $179.99 2 yr. price – $50 mail-in rebate. With new 2 yr. activation connect in more ways:

txt, pix, video, email & IM know what's going on:

download new music & video on the go, get the game score and keep an eye on social networking sites

Win a hybrid!

Sign up for service at a participating Verizon Wireless Communications Store and ask how you could win a brand new hybrid car! Your friends — and the planet — will love you!

Switch to America's Most Reliable Wireless Network®

For sweepstakes details and store locations go to vzwcar.com.

Sweepstakes: NO PURCHASE NECESSARY. Visit a Verizon Wireless Communications Store (B&N and Circuit City not included) and activate a new line of service on a calling plan $39.99 monthly access or higher w/ 2-yr. Agmt, then register online by May 31st to enter. Enter for free by completing an entry form at the store. New line of service must be active for at least 30 days to remain eligible. For official rules and participating locations go to vzwcar.com. Sweepstakes begins on 4/14/08 and ends on 5/11/08. Must be 18 yrs. of age with valid driver's license and legal U.S. resident. Void where prohibited. Limit one entry per person.

Activation Fee/line: $35 ($25 for secondary Family SharePlan® lines w/ 2-yr. Agmt(s).
IMPORTANT CONSUMER INFORMATION: Subject to Customer Agmt, Calling Plan, rebate form & credit approval. Up to $175 early termination Fee/line & other charges & $1.99/MB (incl. Mobile Web adv). Offers and coverage, varying by service, not available everywhere. V CAST Music: per song charges req'd; airtime may apply for music downloads. Rebates take up to 6 weeks. Limited-time offers. While supplies last. Network details and coverage maps at verizonwireless.com. ©2008 Verizon Wireless. 56617

Financial advice for students

FINANCE from page 1

and rising inflation and rising healthcare are reasons to save for retirement, he cautioned.

An IRA is a retirement account that offers tax advantages. There are five different types of IRAs, but individuals must consider which will prove to be most beneficial based on income and eligibility. The most common are Roth and Traditional retirement accounts.

A Roth IRA is recommended for people in their 20s and younger. Typically, when people are in their 20s, they are not making a substantial amount of money. This means they are taxed in a lower tax bracket. As that person gets older and his or her salary increases, they are taxed at a higher rate. If money is put into a Roth IRA when people are in a lower tax bracket, then fewer taxes are taken and the money grows, thanks to compound interest.

"You make money not only with what you are putting in the bank, but with what the bank is giving you in interest," Hashemi said.

"It's that magic of compounding," added Floreen. For this reason as well as "to get in the habit," he believes people should start saving for retirement at the age of 22.

An annual income is the only requirement to open this account. Even a student who only works during the summer is eligible. Someone can put in as little as five dollars a month into their account. Starting at the age of 59 and a half, money can be withdrawn from the account tax-free, because in a Roth IRA taxes are paid before the money is deposited into that account.

The only difference between a Roth IRA and a Traditional IRA is that the money grows tax deferred in a Traditional account. This means that the money deposited into Traditional IRAs is not taxed until withdrawal. This type of IRA is beneficial to people who are taxed in a higher tax bracket but will be at a lower one when they retire, said Branch.

It is important to realize that this is not a savings account, but a retirement account. The money cannot be taken out at your convenience. If money is withdrawn before the age of 59 and a half, then customers are penalized and have to pay excess money. A customer cannot withdraw money to buy a house or pay for their child's college tuition.

"If you're going to be saving money, it's always a benefit to use tax advantages if you can; if you can afford to tie the money up you should," advised Branch.

Due to loans, credit card debt and other financial responsibilities, some people cannot afford to put the money aside. But Hashemi has a different take.

"I think everyone can afford it, it just depends on money management," he said.

He went on to say that not everyone can afford to buy a house or a car, but people find ways to make it happen.

"Young people don't have all the expenses of a grown adult. When you retire, you don't want to worry and it's worth it for long-term happiness," said Erin Bailey, a UMass junior and workshop member.

Accumulating one million dollars sure sounds like happiness, or at least security. Just remember, as Branch points out, a million in 40 years might not be what a million is worth right now. But something is always better than nothing.

Kim Beson can be reached at kbeson@student.umass.edu.

CREDIT TIPS FOR STUDENTS

- Legally, everyone is entitled to a free credit report each year to make sure information is accurate. Visit TransUnion, Experian and Equifax Web sites. Freecreditreport.com is another option, but be aware of unnecessary charges.
- There are two rules to choosing a credit card. Don't pay an annual fee, and make sure the interest rate is [illegible]. Other than that, ask your bank or search [illegible] to see what is right for you.
- Credit cards [illegible] lower interest [illegible]
- [illegible] Depending on the credit [illegible] offer prizes or [illegible] points earned.
- Understand [illegible] know what good and bad interest rates are.
- Create a budget that includes housing, utilities, food, transport, clothing, personal, savings and medical.
- Keep track of how much money is in your checking account and don't be afraid to question the bank.

T. Rex link to chickens studied

By Alissa M. D'Gama
Harvard Crimson

(U-WIRE) CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — In Jurassic Park, the ferocious Tyrannosaurus Rex tears through the island, crushing everything in its path and flinging around raptors and unlucky humans.

But a study in the current issue of Science magazine showed that the king of dinosaurs is related to some animals that might not usually be considered ferocious – like the chicken and the ostrich.

The study used data collected from a T. Rex femur bone found in 2003 that "was really special because it preserved soft tissue," said John M. Asara, one of the authors and the director of the mass spectrometry core at the Harvard-affiliated Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center.

In 2005, the researchers started to work on the bone, and last year, they were able to publish a small set of sequences from the collagen protein.

The bone was processed in a lab at North Carolina State University, and extracts were then sent to Asara and his colleagues, who sequenced them using mass spectrometry.

In this study, the researchers obtained collagen sequences from 21 critical species and used sophisticated algorithms to create an evolutionary tree that included the T. Rex and the 21 other species.

"We pieced all the sequences back together and realized that these sequences were looking more like chicken and ostrich," Asara said, adding that it's not clear whether T. Rex was more closely related to the chicken or the ostrich.

It is clear from the species tree that reptiles are not connected to the group that includes the T. Rex, a theory that had already become widely accepted based on the studies that examined the dinosaur's bone architecture.

"If the T. Rex had popped out somewhere else—say our analysis grouped it with humans—our conclusion would be that we either screwed up the analysis real badly or the sequence from the T. Rex wasn't authentic and there was contamination from some of the workers that sequenced the proteins," said Chris L. Organ, a postdoctoral fellow in organismic and evolutionary biology and a co-author of the study.

He added that while the results of the study didn't clarify any of the evolutionary relationships, they strengthened existing conclusions by using molecular evidence as opposed to bone structure.

"It really sort of suggests that it is possible to get sequences from something as old as 16 million years, if not older," Asara said. "The sequences, even though they're very short, can be used to make evolutionary relationships."

Letter of Apology

Yesterday, the Daily Collegian ran a comic that was just a black box. It was entitled "Wesley Snipes crawling through a tunnel." The comic displayed was one in a series of similar comics that are either just white or black boxes. However, in this instance, the Daily Collegian has received numerous complaints about the content implications. As the Editor in Chief of the Daily Collegian, I assume full responsibility for allowing this controversial comic to be published. I would like to offer an apology on behalf of the Daily Collegian to anyone who may have been offended. I realize race is a sensitive subject, and as a newspaper that prides itself on responsible, objective coverage of the UMass Amherst community, we have a responsibility to uphold the highest journalistic standards, even on our comics page. Allowing this comic to run was a mistake, and I am deeply sorry to our entire readership for subjecting you to this offensive comic. The Daily Collegian pledges that we will be more responsible in the future.

Thank you,
Nicholas Belanger
Editor in Chief

Never Ever Write For Sports news@dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 136

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3499 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Ester
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COMICS EDITOR Adam Szaigin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rier
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ASSOCIATE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Katie Huston

COPY EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

PRODUCTION CREW
Michael Sarkes, Elaine Barba

WEB EDITOR
James Hale

Boston University School of Medicine

Mental Health & Behavioral Medicine Program

summer course offered in

FAMILY THERAPY

This course provides a basic conceptual understanding of the theory and practice of family development. Students will also begin to develop skills and strategies for the assessment and treatment of family system approaches within mental health care.

Classes will run from May 20th to June 26th, Tuesdays & Thursdays, 9 a.m. - 11:50 a.m.

The Mental Health & Behavioral Medicine Program is currently accepting applications for Fall 2008

You are invited to attend our

OPEN HOUSE INFORMATION SESSION

MONDAY, JUNE 9TH, 10 A.M. - 11:30 A.M.

Program Highlights:

- 2-year full-time coursework, including classes in Psychopharmacology, Neuroscience, and Behavioral Medicine.
- This program meets the requirements of independent licensure as a mental health counselor.
- Our curriculum is consistent with the standards recommended by the American Mental Health Counseling Association.

To register for the summer course or RSVP for the Open House, contact Mrs. Mark at nicey@bu.edu or 617-414-2320.

Boston University School of Medicine
Division of Graduate Medical Science
Mental Health & Behavioral Medicine Program

Robinson Building, Suite B-2903
715 Albany Street, Boston, MA 02118-2526
T 617-414-2320 F 617-414-2323
www.bumc.bu.edu/mhbm

BOSTON UNIVERSITY

Win moves Obama closer to nomination

Illinois senator takes N.C., while Clinton wins Indiana

By Saja Hindi
Technician

(U-WIRE) RALEIGH, N.C. — "I love you, Barack!" someone in the crowd of 4,500 yelled.

"I love you back. I truly do," Democratic presidential candidate Barack Obama answered from his podium in Reynolds Coliseum.

Obama spoke to a Reynolds Coliseum audience, including 1,500 were members of the press, on Tuesday night, the day of North Carolina's primary – one that people did not expect to matter at first, but as the race continued, began to count more heavily.

Sen. Obama and Hillary Clinton visited North Carolina several times in the past few months, along with their family members and members of their campaigns, to gain the support of North Carolina voters.

"There were those of you who said North Carolina would be a game changer, but today, North Carolina decided the only game that needs changing is the one in Washington, D.C.," Obama said.

Although Indiana's primary was not yet over and was still too early to call, according to some news stations, Obama congratulated Clinton on her win.

"Tonight, we stand less than 200 delegates away from scoring the nomination for president of the United States," he said.

Obama stressed the importance of staying united as a party no matter who wins the Democratic nomination.

"Ultimately [...] this election is about you, the American people, and whether we will have a president and party to lead to a brighter future," he said.

Melissa Williams, a senior at North Carolina State University in biology, nutrition and middle school science education, said she really hoped Obama would win North Carolina.

"I feel that he offers something different than the other candidates," Williams said.

And according to her, the crowd was a lot smaller than she expected.

"It was awesome ... I got to shake his hand," she said.

Taylor Massey, a junior in textiles engineering, said he came to see Obama because he likes him and believes in his message.

"[We need] overall change in Washington," he said. "I don't really like all the people there now. They're not really doing enough to help us out – the real people. Obama will make the right change in the right places. He has the right ideas."

But Massey said the crowd was larger than he anticipated, considering students had already gone home for exams.

Obama talked about ending the war in Iraq in his speech, saying he trusted that the American people would not see it as surrendering; rather, a chance to better security, and also said he hoped the American people would see the wisdom in talking with not only America's friends but its enemies.

"Opportunity is yours if you're willing to reach for it and work for it," he said.

By Stanley Leibson

Illinois Senior Barack Obama (center), shown here at a Boston rally with Mass. Governor Deval Patrick earlier in the campaign season, defeated N.Y. Senator Hillary Clinton in North Carolina's Democratic Primary election on May 6. He is now 200 delegates away from securing the nomination.

University baffled by death

'Smiley face' clue said to link multiple student drownings

By Michelle Besaw
Cardinal Points

(U-WIRE) PLATTSBURGH, N.Y. — Recent findings may link the death of Josh Szostak to a series of alleged nationwide murders, but officials have rejected the theory.

Josh's father Bill came across a smiley face spray-painted on a tree while he searched the Port of Albany Wednesday for a piece of jewelry his son was wearing the night he disappeared, he told WPTZ, the local NBC-affiliated television station.

The smiley face may be an indication that Josh's death could be related to about 40 incidents nationwide where white, college-aged males died in what was deemed accidental drowning.

The 2003 case of University of Minnesota college student Chris Jenkins was reopened as a homicide, and University of Wisconsin student Cullen Fortney found his way to a nearby hospital after pulling himself from the Mississippi River in January 2006.

Det. James Miller, a spokesperson for the Albany Police Department, said the smiley face has "no credibility whatsoever," blaming it on graffiti. He added that, with all the national hype, there is a good possibility that the painting is a cruel joke on the family or some kind of copycat. Detectives have no reason to believe the face is an indication of foul play or murder.

Josh's death was ruled an accidental drowning following the results of two autopsies and the case is considered closed.

The smiley face investigation began 11 years ago with retired New York City police detectives Kevin Gannon and Anthony Duarte, who say they have linked the drowning of at least 40 other men in 25 cities in 11 different states to a possible serial killer or group of killers.

According to reports, Gannon and Duarte found a smiley face symbol at the location where the body entered the water in 12 drowning cases. Almost all of the men were last seen while leaving a bar or college party.

Duarte told a Saint Paul, Minnesota, news station that this is "a perfect crime" because water washes away physical evidence and there are never any witnesses.

University Police Investigator Seth Silver said campus officials have no information regarding the smiley face.

According to a WPTZ report, the "smiley face murders" have sparked questions in the case of missing Middlebury student Nicholas Garza who disappeared in January. Garza's mother and aunt have scoured the city in search of smiley faces since they heard about the theory. The search did not yield any results.

Outbreak plagues Princeton U.

By Jack Ackerman
The Daily Princetonian

(U-WIRE) PRINCETON, N.J. — The number of confirmed salmonella infections on the Princeton University campus has risen to 16, including 15 students and one staff member. University officials have not yet determined the source of the recent outbreak of the bacterial infection.

Despite not knowing the source, the Princeton Regional Health Department (PRHD) has been working with New Jersey state officials to conduct preliminary food history surveys with both infected and healthy students. The data collected so far points to the Frist Gallery as being a possible source of infection, PRHD health officer David Henry said.

The results of the surveys, however, are not yet conclusive because a large percentage of the student population eats at the Gallery on a regular basis, Henry noted. He said the department is keeping an open mind, adding that the investigation maintains "a very broad focus."

In the meantime, the University has taken several precautionary measures to minimize students' risk of exposure, University spokeswoman Cass Cliatt '96 said, explaining that the University has decided to switch produce suppliers and has temporarily closed the Ole and Saladology stations in the Frist Gallery.

"The University is taking steps to prevent further infection," Cliatt said, explaining that Dining Services has "stopp[ped] serving some of the types of food that are commonly connected to salmonella infections."

Salmonella can be carried in [illegible] uncooked food, including produce, Henry explained. Once infected, a person usually develops fever, cramps and diarrhea after a 12- to 72-hour incubation period. In otherwise healthy people, the infection often resolves itself within five to seven days without further treatment.

At this time, no new cases have been reported since the precautionary measures were put in place.

"As of this point, the last date of onset of symptoms from the confirmed cases was April 30," Cliatt said. "This was before the University took precautionary steps to remove some food items from service and to close some Food stations at Frist."

Lab results on stool samples collected from 59 other "suspect" cases are pending, Cliatt added. These patients presented with gastrointestinal illness characteristic of salmonella infection. On average, there are about 10 cases of gastroenteritis not caused by salmonella reported weekly at the University.

Salmonella bacteria have in recent years grown resistant to cer[illegible] that have been used [illegible] growth in livestock, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

In a small number of cases, people infected with salmonella can develop Reiter's syndrome, which is characterized by eye irritation, joint pain and painful urination.

Anyone exhibiting symptoms of infection is urged to visit McCosh Health Center and contact the New Jersey Department of Health. Students who are ill should also frequently wash their hands to prevent spreading the infection to others.

EChecking
The ultimate in convenience plus lots of cool stuff, like...
• FREE ATM Transactions, Nationwide*
• FREE Debit Card
• FREE ESB Online Anytime Banking and Bill Pay
• FREE E-Statements
• FREE First Order of 50 Checks
• No Minimum Balance Required
Anytime Checking
ESBOnline
Anytime Banking
bankesb.com
Easthampton Savings Bank • 413-527-4111
Belchertown | Easthampton | Hadley | Northampton | South Hadley | Southampton | Westfield
Member FDIC
Member DIF
*$10 minimum deposit to open E-Checking Account. No minimum balance required to maintain account. Other bank's ATM surcharge fees that are charged to the account during current statement cycle will be refunded on the last business day of the current statement cycle. Accounts closed or changed to another product during a current statement cycle will not receive a refund of the other bank's ATM surcharge fees.

MOVINGON?
Rent a Truck or Cargo Van
Starting at $19.95
Special Reduced Rates Monday to Thursday
POTTER'S
AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Round Trip Rentals to and from Boston, New York & New Jersey
• One Way Rentals
• Hand Trucks & Furniture Pads Available for Rent
• Boxes & Moving Accessories Available for Sale
The Economical Way To Move
549-RENT (7368)
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.pottersauto.com

Up Late Saturday Night?
1pm Sunday Worship
MERCYhouse :: knowmercy.org

HATS OFF TO GRADUATES!
COME CELEBRATE WITH US AT Salem Cross Inn
— RESTAURANT —
Route 9, 260 West Main St., West Brookfield, MA
Great food, Great setting, Great time! Call now to book your reservation!
Groups of any size welcome!
(508) 867-2345
www.salemcrossinn.com

Lockdown closes U.R., yields arrest

By Dan Petty
The Collegian

(U-WIRE) RICHMOND, Va. — University of Richmond officials say a suspect has been arrested in connection with a lockdown that left the school closed for four hours Tuesday.

The suspect, 19-year-old Seth Adam Newman of the 1700 block of Chadwick Drive in Henrico County, was allegedly seen carrying a handgun Tuesday in Boatwright Memorial Library.

University of Richmond Chief of Police Bob Dillard said through a university spokeswoman that police had recovered a pellet gun on campus they believe Newman was carrying Tuesday.

Newman has been charged with one felony count for hiding his identity and two misdemeanor counts for impersonating a law enforcement officer and for acting like a law enforcement officer, according to a university statement.

Employees at the library spotted a suspect matching Newman's description around 3 p.m. Tuesday near the circulation desk, school officials said. He was wearing a holster with a handgun, a bucket hat, a brown jacket with the word "Sheriff" printed on the back, and carrying a green duffel bag, authorities said. When employees asked for identification, he declined to give it.

Police said that tips from the community began coming around 3 p.m. Tuesday and continued through the night and Wednesday, which they said helped tremendously in tracking down Newman.

The lockdown at the University of Richmond campus was lifted after police said they have not found a suspected gunman in Boatwright Memorial Library, university spokesman Brian Eckert announced around 7:15 p.m. Tuesday.

"The campus has been thoroughly searched, and there is no threat apparent at this time," Eckert said. "The police feel that the suspicious individual that was seen earlier this afternoon has left campus and left the area."

The campus was placed on lockdown around 3:30 p.m. Tuesday after employees at the library reported seeing a man wearing a fake beard and carrying either a B.B. gun or semi-automatic pistol, Eckert said.

Eckert said university employees at the library circulation desk saw the suspect, who was described as a slender white male in his late 20s at 5 feet, 11 inches with short blonde hair.

The suspect was wearing a bucket hat, carrying an olive-green duffel bag, and walking through the library and changing clothes, Eckert said. He was wearing a navy shirt and a brown jacket that said "Sheriff" on the back, Eckert said.

When library employees asked the suspect for identification, he declined to give it, Eckert said.

Most students have left the campus for the summer after final exams for undergraduates ended Saturday. Faculty and staff are still on campus, and law students are finishing exams.

University officials activated the emergency alert system after the employees called the university police around 2:50 p.m. The first text message was sent around 3:30 p.m. and read: "Dangerous person reported on campus. Use caution, and warn others. Report unusual activity to [university police]."

Officials also contacted students through voicemail, e-mail and telephone calls to cell phones and room phone. Students receiving alerts to their cell phones had to have been registered with the university's alert system.

A second message followed around 4:30 p.m. that said, "Dangerous person reported on campus, carrying a gun. Person is 5'11", blonde, thin, with navy shirt. Seek shelter and lock down."

University police and Resident Life officials were going door-to-door to inform students of the lockdown's status. Many students were getting information from local television news stations, the Internet and radio.

Police from the University of Richmond, the City of Richmond, and Henrico County responded to the incident. Richmond City dispatched a bloodhound to sweep the library after a piece of the suspect's fake beard was found outside the building, but the trail eventually went cold, Eckert said. A police helicopter was also searching campus from above.

Harder to prevent pregnancy

Birth control prices remain high on college campuses

By Tessa McClellan
Daily Bruin

(UWIRE) LOS ANGELES, Calif. — Protection from unwanted pregnancies is becoming more expensive and daunting for more than three million college-age women as a result of recent increases in the prices of birth control.

An unintentional glitch in the Deficit Reduction Act of 2005, which was enacted to help low-income and college-age women afford birth control, resulted in the economic vulnerability of the same women it intended to protect, said Elissa Bradley, an officer in the School of Public Health Reproductive Health Interest Group.

"Planned Parenthood and other reproductive health clinics can still purchase pharmaceuticals at the discounted price, (but the bill) did not include an exemption for college health centers," said Hillary Howard, a graduate chair on the Student Health Advisory Committee.

For more than 20 years, university health care centers have been able to purchase birth control at discounted rates and pass those savings on to students, said Serena Josel, public affairs manager at Planned Parenthood Los Angeles. But when the error in the Deficit Reduction Act passed through Congress, both universities and students suffered as university health care centers could no longer purchase all forms of birth control at cheaper prices.

Josel added that the price of birth control has increased from between $5 and $10 dollars per month to $40 or $50 dollars per month on many college campuses.

"Students all over the country are having problems with access to birth control," Howard said. While some legislators, including presidential candidate Sen. Barrack Obama, D-Ill., introduced the Prevention Through Affordable Access Act to reverse the mistake, it has yet to become law.

The price increases resulting from the legislative oversight could have serious consequences, Josel said, because the number of unintended pregnancies tends to increase when young women lack access to affordable birth control.

UCLA students have not been immune to price increases. Students began paying more for birth control in September 2007 because the birth control that the Arthur Ashe Student Health and Wellness Center had bought at the discounted rate ran out in the summer, Bradley said.

Those UCLA students covered by the Student Health Insurance Plan who choose to purchase brand-name forms of birth control, such as the Nuva Ring, EstroStep Fe and Ortho Tri-Cyclen Lo, have been affected more than those using generic forms of birth control, said Ann Brooks, nurse practitioner and nurse manager of the Women's Health Clinic at the Ashe Center.

Students with SHIP have seen an increase in their co-pay from $15 per month to $30 for Nuva Ring or $45 per month for Ortho Tri-Cyclen Lo. Without insurance, the costs are even higher.

A student with SHIP using a generic brand of birth control pays the same $15 co-pay that she would pay for other generic prescription medications, Howard said.

Prices of birth control for students without SHIP are more variable, she added, and depend on students' insurance.

"The benefit that students on SHIP get is that they always know what the prices of birth control will be," Howard said. "(At Ashe) they try to make it as reasonable as possible."

Brooks said employees at Ashe try to help students by working with them to switch to cheaper, more generic forms of birth control similar to the brand-name types.

"We basically try to accommodate both (students') medical and contraceptive needs and their financial needs," Brooks said.

Student activists and individuals working in clinics like Planned Parenthood are working with college students and low-income women across the country to motivate them to write to their representatives and push for change, Josel said.

Since the Deficit Reduction Act of 2005 went into effect on January 1, 2007, more than 400 UCLA students have signed a postcard petition and worked in support of the Prevention Through Affordable Access Act, which would fix the technical error, Bradley said.

Josel said she is optimistic that the bill will pass. But she added that interested individuals must continue putting pressure on those in Congress to get their support on the bill.

"The fix for this would be so simple and it would cost neither Congress nor the American people a dime," Josel said.

"It's extremely urgent for this to be fixed immediately so that young women can go back to accessing birth control for $5 to $10 a month."

Study links drinking habits with cancer

By Jill Kimball
Oregon Daily Emerald

(UWIRE) EUGENE, Ore. — Most health experts weren't surprised when a recent National Cancer Institute study revealed a connection between alcohol consumption and breast cancer, but it was the first study that statistically connected the dots.

The NCI sent out a survey to AARP members in 1995, asking them about their lifestyles and dietary habits. The NCI has followed the survey's participants since then to find connections between various cancers and lifestyle choices.

One group, led by University of Chicago medical student Jasmine Lew, looked for possible connections between breast cancer and alcohol drinking habits. The result?

"We found that regular, moderate alcohol consumption was associated with an increased risk of the most common type of cancer," Lew said.

And the more alcohol a woman drinks, Lew said, the greater her risk.

In the late 1990s, scientists found sufficient evidence that alcohol was not just a catalyst of cancer, but a carcinogen itself – which made the results of the study all the more plausible.

"We tend to find alcohol is associated with a number of certain diseases, including several types of cancers," said University Health Center Medical Director Ben Douglas.

For example, he said, the fact that nicotine, another carcinogen, is connected to lung and oral cancers has been common knowledge for a number of decades.

But the study did not just point to the already obvious connection; it also was the first study of its kind to look at breast cancer as a group of different diseases.

"That is something pretty new," Lew said.

The study found that the strongest connection between breast cancer and alcohol was in estrogen-receptor and progesterone-receptor-positive (ER+ PR+) cancer, the most common type. Women who drank three or more drinks daily were 51 percent more likely to develop ER+/PR+ breast cancer, whereas no link could be found between alcohol consumption and women with ER- PR- tumors.

Scientists have yet to find the reason why the link is evident in certain types of cancer and not in others, but the NCI group's hypothesis is that "alcohol somehow interferes with estrogen metabolism in ER+/PR+ cases."

Another theory has to do with alcohol's interference with the metabolism of one-carbon [illegible], Lew said.

Either way, "the connection with alcohol is probably a main cause," she said.

"The alcohol might be something to make the receptors in the breast tissue react differently," Douglas theorized. "But prevention is the thing that I [illegible] right now."

NOW OFFERING Cash for Books Prepaid MasterCard !
CASH FOR BOOKS
We're buying your books back at these convenient locations:
Textbook Annex
Monday - Wednesday, May 12 - 14 9am – 4pm
Thursday – Friday, May 15 – 16 9am – 5pm
Saturday, May 17 11am – 4pm
Monday - Wednesday, May 19 - 21 9am – 5pm
Thursday, May 22 9am – 4pm
Campus Center- Concourse
Monday - Wednesday, May 12 - 14 9am – 4pm
Thursday – Friday, May 15 – 16 9am – 5pm
Saturday, May 17 11am – 4pm
Monday - Wednesday, May 19 - 21 9am – 5pm
Thursday, May 22 9am – 2pm
Southwest- Hampden Lobby
Thursday – Friday, May 15 - 16 10am – 5pm
Monday - Wednesday, May 19 - 21 10am – 5pm
Thursday, May 22 10am – 1pm
UMASS AMHERST University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413 545 2619
efollett.com ONLINE. ON CAMPUS.
790

STUDENT RELAXES FOR ELEVEN STRAIGHT MINUTES!
NAMEintheNEWS.COM

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself." - Sir Salman Rushdie

THURSDAY, MAY 8, 2008 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

It's time to reevaluate our evaluations

Nick Milano

At the end of every semester, as is happening right now, professors hand out pale blue and maroon multiple choice sheets. Instead of tests for the students, their questions concern the professor's teaching ability and the class's quality.

Once they disappear into the manila folder, we students never see them again. Instead of being used solely to the University's advantage, there is another, more helpful idea. Why not count the results and then release them for the student's own usage?

Teachers gain from the evaluations to see how students are responding to their type of teaching, to see if their students are learning and to gauge whether students are even interested in how they present topics.

Students would stand to gain a lot from a more open evaluation process. By publishing these teacher evaluations, students will know which teachers are able to connect to their personal learning styles.

If teachers consistently get poor grades on how much students have said that they learn, the only people who know are the teachers and the administration. Releasing the results from the multiple choice section of the evaluations will surely aid students' selection of classes.

A major problem I found with class selection during my freshman year was the fact that I had no idea what to expect from my professors.

I was lucky enough to meet one New Students Orientation (NSO) counselor who recommended that I check out Ratemyprofessors.com, a Web site where students have the chance to offer an evaluation of professors, but even the most commented professors only have a very small sliver of the actual number of students they have taught.

Another problem with Internet rating sites is that they can be unreliable. Many times, the only people who actually comment on a teacher are those who either absolutely loved their professor or absolutely hated them. It seems as if there is no middle ground.

The only way for a person to get an idea of what a teacher can offer is by having real conversations with past students. For entering freshmen, this is nearly impossible. Even for those looking for a good general education class have to wing it and go with what classes their friends have said are easy.

Since evaluations are already made, the University has all the information at its disposal. It simply has to compile all the professors into a database and post it on the Web site.

Professors may complain that personal opinions of them are made public, but it would only benefit this institution of higher learning.

Since evaluations are already made, the University has all the information at its disposal.

If when signing up for a class on SPIRE, students could see what teachers have historically taught boring classes, they will know what to expect. It is much easier to be pressured into doing work by a professor who shows a genuine interest in seeing his or her students learning.

Professors who have lackluster ratings may see their classes skipped over or not fill up. What better way is it to send a message that a professor is failing to teach students than to do it by boycotting a class?

It may sound harsh to publicize how students feel about certain professors, but they are professionals who should not be able to skate by performing inadequately.

Newly-minted Chancellor Robert Holub has said that he wants UMass to become one of the elite public institutions in the United States. This shows a dedication to having a responsible faculty that can learn from its inadequacies.

Professors who do not motivate their students to be interested in the subject or are simply unable to educate their students have no place at this institution. Publicizing teacher evaluations will weed out those who put no effort into their duties in helping students, from incoming freshmen to departing seniors, to select classes that will give them all what they came to UMass for – a legitimate education.

Nick Milano writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

The smoking gun

John Glaser

Ryan Frederick was asleep this January when he awoke to the sound of his front door being bashed in. He had experienced a break-in earlier that same week, so Frederick grabbed the gun he kept for self-defense and fired through the broken door at the intruder. The bullet struck Detective Jarrod Silvers of the Chesapeake Police Department and killed him.

Ryan Frederick is in jail and has been charged with first degree murder. The warrant the police obtained said that an informant had confirmed that Frederick was growing large amounts of marijuana in his garage and that he had been in Ryan's home three days prior, around the time Ryan reported having experienced a break-in.

Frederick's neighbors characterize him as an avid gardener. The police found plenty of plants – including a Japanese maple, which looks very similar to a marijuana plant – but did not find any evidence of marijuana being grown. They did find a small amount of marijuana inside the home, but only enough to charge him with a misdemeanor.

The police were wrong, and it led to tragedy. But even if they were right, would it have been reasonable for them to raid the home of a man with no prior criminal record after nightfall?

Hundreds of these raids, often serving non-violent drug warrants and resulting in the death of an innocent, have occurred in recent years. The New York Times recently reported that the United States imprisons more people than any other nation in the world, with one in every 100 adults behind bars. Almost 4,000 people are arrested every day just for possession of illegal drugs, which is more than are arrested for aggravated assault, burglary, vandalism, forcible rape and murder combined.

This is unlikely a surprise to UMass students. There have been dozens of marijuana-related arrests these past two semesters, and students defiantly celebrated the holiday of Mary Jane this past month on April 20 at "Extravaganja," for which the UMass Amherst Cannabis Reform Coalition reported having the best turnout ever. UMass's fight-the-power tradition of activism epitomizes the fundaments of drug decriminalization.

We could talk about how unnecessarily costly the drug war has been. Or about how prohibition in no way decreases the availability of drugs. We could talk about how prohibition is what associates drugs with violence, theft and abuse by driving it into the black market. We could talk about the veritable harmlessness of marijuana, which the government puts into the same category as heroin. Or about cases in which the government imprisons sick people for using that drug for medical purposes.

While these are all valid considerations, they remain on the periphery of the issue at hand, and avoid the most fundamental question: Should the government engage in a "war" on the right of adults to consume whatever substances they want? Studies show that people are much more apt to commit violent crimes under the influence of alcohol than when they're high on marijuana, heroin or cocaine. Is it the responsibility of the government to protect us from ourselves?

This mindset – that the government must use laws to ensure that we don't consume substances they deem inappropriate – leads to extremes, like in 2006 when New York became the nation's first city to ban trans-fats in restaurants. Not only must the government protect us from using hard drugs, but they must also regulate our diets? Aren't we adults? Can we not be respected enough to make decisions for ourselves, even if they might be bad ones? In a free society, the people ought to be free from the heavy hand of governmental force; free to make their own decisions.

This mindset – that the government must use laws to ensure that we don't consume substances they deem inappropriate – leads to extremes.

People find all sorts of reasons to justify government usurpation of power. Whether it's protection from weapons of mass destruction (that don't exist), the plight of the poor, the success of the rich, fat people eating fattening foods or marijuana use, everyone has their pet issue, their plea for more powerful, more controlling government. They either forget or ignore the simple equation that as government expands, liberty contracts.

In no way is the case of Ryan Frederick characteristic of what a free country should resemble. A team of government paramilitary enforcers raiding the home of a man who committed no act of violence or coercion against any other citizen, on faulty intelligence and misled laws, sounds to me like the antithesis of the liberty we're supposed to uphold in this country.

Whenever the domain of what is legitimate for the government to control is expanded by the pleas of the misinformed that prefer centralized power over liberty, individual rights are trounced upon, and expansive campaigns of unintended consequences transpire. Problems are created, not solved. So the next time you're inclined to entrust and implore our government to exceed its constitutional limits to protect you from this or provide you with that, think of Ryan Frederick and Jarrod Silvers, whose lives didn't have to be ruined, but for the earnest pleas of the misinformed.

John Glaser is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jwglaser@student.umass.edu.

Save the food for people

Matt Hoffman

Question: What is the only thing worse than simultaneously polluting the Earth and supporting corrupt Arab dictators?

Possible answer: Using mass quantities of food for a purpose other than feeding people.

As a way to reduce America's dependence on foreign oil, many Americans have turned toward vegetable oil and corn ethanol as a way to energize their cars. For instance, Willie Nelson, the American singer-songwriter, uses differing types of vegetable oil to power his car. As such, the Mercedes he drives often smells of French fries or peanuts, according to The New York Times.

Kudos should go out to the Americans who are being creative in their attempts to rid the world of pollution and oppression. Yet the quick-fix that many of our fellow citizens have come up with does not seem to do the job of making the general world situation better.

In the past few months, riots have erupted in Haiti over the price of food – a basic commodity which many people could hardly afford before the price hike. At the same time, many children around the world continue to starve to death. Even here in America, the land of plenty, limits are being placed on how much of certain foods one can buy.

If people do not have food, there is not even a chance of hope or salvation in the world.

It seems that much of the worsening problem of the lack of food availability is due to the use of food for fuel.

High levels of asthma present in inner-city children due to obscene levels of pollution is a problem. So is the hazardous and uncomfortable position of driving behind a truck and having its fumes pour through the vents of your small Honda Civic.

Another problem is the fact that Saudi oil money fuels war crimes in Iraq, Israel, Britain and the United States. When you fill up your gas tank, depending on which gas station you use, a large portion of that money goes to the Saudi government, which in turn funds Saudi-Wahhabi mosques around the world. These mosques are known for their spewing of intolerance of non-Muslims as well as belittling Muslims who do not ascribe to their world view. These Wahhabi disciplines is the ideology that educated the perpetrators and fueled the hate-filled world-view of the September 11 hijackers, many of the suicide bombers who murder Israelis and the suicide bombers that detonated themselves on London trains and buses

Both the issues of pollution and oppression constitute problems. These issues need to be solved. Yet if people do not have food, there is not even a chance of hope or salvation in the world. In good conscience, we should avoid worsening an issue with life-or-death consequences in order to fix another issue of life-or-death severity.

Let us see if we can solve the problems at hand with such thought and concentration that we can solve one problem without making another worse.

One answer could be found in the use of electric cars. Project Better Place is an Israeli firm that has plans to put 100,000 battery-powered cars on the roads of Israel by 2011.

Instead of filling up at gas stations, drivers recharge their cars at home and in the parking lots of their offices. For long-distance drives, car owners can go to a battery-exchange station. The time it takes for a car to receive a re-charged battery placed in their car is less than the amount of time it takes to fill a tank of gas.

If the plan works in Israel, other small countries may sign onto the project, such as Denmark. The plan has gained many supporters, and the parent company of Nissan cars has signed on to produce the cars. Indeed, one of the investors in Project Better Place, Michael Granoff, spoke about the feasibility of such a plan at UMass earlier this semester.

Americans have the ingenuity and wherewithal to create a system that will reduce pollution, cease the flood of money to hate-spewing regimes, as well as allow food to continue being eaten by people – not machines. We can look at the example that Israel is providing for us. We can add in our own ingenuity. We can have our clean parks, women's rights in Saudi Arabia, and feed the entire globe, too. I know we can do it. Let us show the world we mean business.

Matt Hoffman is a Collegian columnist and president of the Student Alliance for Israel. He can be reached at mjhoffma@student.umass.edu.

Ryan J. Elliot

Thanks to those who helped along the way

Brad Leibowitz

We are each others' keepers. If I can offer you any advice at all, it is this: Make your mistakes at full speed. Have regrets. Skip class to hang with friends. Stay up too late. Sleep in till 2 p.m. Play trivia at the Harp. Go to the Monkey Bar once and never return. Make ABC Upstairs your home. Curse in class at a teacher. Have sex in an empty lecture hall. Graduate from Busch and Natty Light. Read books that aren't assigned to you. Jump off the cliffs in the Deerfield River. Swim across Puffers Pond. Give up drinking long enough to appreciate a pint. Break a law and face the fire standing up. But mostly, live for yourself and love the people who have made you who you are. This is for a certain few.

Jared – I'd do anything for you, any day at any hour. You have provided me with more laughter and joy then you'll ever know. I am glad you have asthma – I couldn't bear you going to Iraq. I couldn't live with that news. You're my brother, I love you. Anytime, anywhere. For you, I will keep my phone on.

Drew – I still can't believe that you believe so much in my dreams, that you're willing to make them our own and care for them as much as I. I don't know what's going to happen to us. I am glad to know that for the next few years, you'll be by my side. Through thick and thin, whatever happens, like Jared, you're my brother, always. I love you.

Cathy – Someone once told that you have to go to college to truly appreciate the other sex – to value the other sex as a person and not an object of a means to an end. Bradakins. I have valued every second I have spent with you. Your smile and your laugh calms me. You have enriched my life in more ways then I can say. I've never had a sister until you. I wonder what will come of us out west. I am glad that you will be by my side over the next few years. I love you, C.

Devin – What to say, D? I honestly believe that if there was an entry in Webster's for "spur of the moment," your picture would be next to it. I've never told you this, but I've aspired to reach your personality and persona every day of my college career. There is no one in the world that has ever or will ever provide me with more joy, laughter and great times than you. If all else goes wrong, just knowing you has made me a better person. If I make it, everything I have is yours. I love you.

Susie – Beautiful. Lovely. Realer than real. I love everything you do. I am envious of all your artistic talent. Like WHOAA! Jem. From all the conversations we had in your room freshman year, to the semester in which I missed you dearly, up till now. You will be in my thoughts for as long as I live. You have redefined what the word woman means to me. I've given up drinking whiskey, but with you I'll share a drink – drink it slowly to taste the barley. You're funky fresh man. I love you.

Live for yourself and love the people who have made you who you are.

Tory – It's been interesting. I hope you fall off a cliff into a pile of jagged rocks. You know everything about me and I can live with that. I know losing your grandfather was hard, but I hope that I provided some solace to you over those days. Just know that whatever you need, whenever, I'll always be there for you. I'll drop everything for you. You're my sister. Even though you're messy and greasy, you're lovely. Friends forever man. I love you.

Rivers – Devin's the luckiest man on the face of the earth to have you. I'll let you in on something. Every time a girl meets you, they always say "...You know, she's beautiful and has a striking boyfriend, so it should be easy to hate her. But, she's just such a good person." You are an amazingly sweet girl, never lose that. Jen, Devin is the luckiest man on the face of the Earth for having you, but I am even luckier than him for having the pleasure to call you a friend. I hope all your dreams come true. I will miss you dearly. Anytime you want a place to stay in California, you got one.

Shiner – You're the best man I know. One day, that woman will come around. Most people are picky, yet you have a reason to be. You rightly hold yourself in the highest regard, pick carefully. Make sure she deserves you. You're the best man I know. I'll miss you greatly.

Cory – I am glad you found Jill. I don't know her that well, but I will tell you this. If you have the same effect you've had on me, she'll be the better person for having you in her life. You're a great guy. I am confident that everything you want will be yours. I'll miss you dearly. You're part of my black rock.

Dan – You remember that night we stole all those chicken patties from you? You remember how mad you were? You're a good man for taking all the ridiculousness I have done to you. Just remember man, continue playing pranks on people, it keeps them on their toes. Lay off Shiner a bit about the girls, ya know, he's the man. One day, when you least expect it, I will break out on one of your tours. Try drinking something other than Captain. I'll miss you, brother.

Leah, Beckah, Jen, Jess and Caitlyn – You're my second family. You've brightened my days and my nights by providing me with the feeling of a home. And Jen, don't worry about the height – if you were single, it would have been on.

You have all made me a better man. You are my keepers. It's been an honor to know you. I can't thank you enough.

Just like that. "Oh my God, wait and see, what will soon become of me? Frozen heart, screaming wheels, does that screaming come from me?"

Brad Leibowitz was a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bleibowi@student.umass.edu.

POINT-COUNTER-POINT

"Freedom rings where opinions clash." - Adlai E. Stevenson

The chancellor search: Who's choosing?

A student disconnect

Nicholas O'Malley

The University of Massachusetts chancellor selection committee recently appointed the Cookie Monster, former dean of Omnomnomnom College, as the new chancellor. Well, not really, unfortunately. But if they did, would you notice?

The truth is that the student body has little to no input, feedback or overall information concerning who the chancellor is and how the candidates are selected. In general, students are kept in the dark, separated from a decision that could greatly impact their college lives.

I've heard some misinformed comments concerning the appointment of the new chancellor, Dr. Robert C. Holub. In one instance, I asked an individual if she even knew there was going to be a new chancellor. Her reply was, "Well, yeah, I knew that Gargano left, so they had to replace him."

However inaccurate, the quote brings forth an important issue: With all the bursars, provosts, deans and vice chancellors of student affairs (like Gargano) in Whitmore, what makes the chancellor any different than all the other higher-ups that compose our administration?

It's quite easy to say that the campus is uninformed on the subject to make such an important decision. The student body, however, is uninformed because the administration makes no effort to inform them. The ignorance on the subject is not due to the students' inability to grasp the process, it's because they have nothing to grasp.

One quick glance at the UMass Web site shows why.

The Web site for the Chancellor's office contains only a five-sentence biography of current Chancellor Thomas Cole, two outdated stories on the chancellor search, and links to information on past chancellors and how to contact the office.

It contains no information on what the chancellor for the UMass Amherst campus actually does, which is another point entirely.

The search for the new chancellor is a process that is not openly presented to the students, and conducted by higher ups in the UMass administration that are unknown to students. In fact, there's only one name on the board, Eugene M. Isenberg, who's recognizable, but only because the School of Management building is named after him.

It may be that if the administration decided to allow the students to have input into who our chancellor would be, they might choose someone that would – gasp – benefit the students as well as the school.

Perhaps if we knew what the chancellors did and how to make an impact on campus decisions, there would be less construction and renovation of buildings that would not, in the end, be used by most students. Perhaps there would be no need to gather in protest outside of Whitmore to try to get our voice heard. And maybe, if the choice were made by someone other than anonymous administration members, we'd know who our new chancellor actually was.

Speaking of our new chancellor, who is he? Other than the fact that he was Provost and Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs at the University of Tennessee Knoxville, very little is known.

Students were afforded the opportunity to speak with the candidates during the selection process, but how many of us went? It's an opportunity missed not because students are just too lazy, but because the position is so detached from the student population. The general sentiment is, "What does it matter, anyway?"

What does the chancellor actually do? What will he do to help students? Will he reduce fees? Does he like the Red Sox?

These are all important questions that should greatly affect his tenure here at UMass. However, since most of these will not get answered (especially the last one), there's very little chance that we will ever know much.

Regardless of whether or not the administration intends to disclose what the chancellor's intentions are for the campus, they should increase his image at UMass. It's difficult to envision the chancellor as an important figure on campus when nobody knows who he is.

It's not like it would be difficult; all the administration would have to do is give students free stuff and tell them that it's from Chancellor Holub. There, everyone loves him.

Nevertheless, the issue still remains that nothing remotely close to that will happen. The administration has set a standard where major decisions on the campus are not openly available to the students. It is truly unfortunate that the appointment of such an important official (we think, we're not sure what he does) is left to the people that already run our college lives.

Nicholas O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

The value of experience

Eric Magazu

Around our campus, we hear calls for more student involvement in the selection of administrators, including our search for a new Chancellor. Encouraging student involvement is a fine idea, and students do have a proper role. In the end, however, we are on this campus to learn from those who know more than us. Therefore, the search must be conducted by our elders, keeping in mind that they must remain bound by certain higher principles.

Students should be consulted on certain key issues. Areas such as extracurricular activities, student organizations, and housing and dining services can definitely benefit from student input. The Wellman Document, a document primarily spoken of within student government circles, guarantees students such involvement. This is one reason it is important for students to be involved in our student government.

The ultimate selection of administrators, however, must continue to remain with our elders. The reason should be relatively self-evident, even among students, as we recognize that as students we are here precisely because we are seeking knowledge and wisdom that we have not yet acquired. It would be foolish for students unfamiliar in academics and limited in experience to determine what we should learn and the people who will guide us in this path.

The power invested in our elders for the purposes of selecting administrators is not unlimited. This power is indeed severely bound by certain higher principles. The sages of Western civilization, and of all civilizations, have long recognized that it is the principles and ideals that are taught in education that, in subsequent generations, will be reflected by the larger society. The conclusion reached is that the guiding principle behind all education, and what should bind us in the selection of administrators, is fundamentally moral in nature.

We are taught that there is no place for education in morality and ethics in our public institutions and that perhaps the First Amendment even forbids such training. History shows this to be untrue. Our ancestors recognized that moral, even religious, education is essential to the preservation of our civil liberties. This contrasts sharply with the false teaching of such groups as the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU).

Similar to the federal government, each state in the United States has its own Constitution. Our Constitution in Massachusetts teaches us the foundation of education. Section I of Chapter V of the Constitution teaches, "[…] the encouragement of arts and sciences, and all good literature, tends to the honor of God, the advantage of the Christian religion, and the great benefit of this and the other United States of America."

Section 2 of the same chapter elaborates further: "Wisdom, and knowledge, as well as virtue, diffused generally among the body of the people, being necessary for the preservation of their rights and liberties; [it is the duty of public schools and universities] to countenance and inculcate the principles of humanity and general benevolence, public and private charity, industry and frugality, honesty and punctuality in their dealings, sincerity, good humor, and all social affections, and generous sentiments among the people."

In their selection of administrators, our elders are bound by these higher principles. It may be argued that in our modern society we are unable to agree on a shared set of moral principles, but this is untrue. Not only do the consciences of human beings recognize superior moral truth, but the reality of our culture today shows that our current course cannot be sustained. Even if as students we enjoy drinking parties and casual hookups, we continue to recognize that there is a certain moral structure missing. When we go home to visit family, and look into the eyes of our younger siblings, we know we would never want them to learn these values.

In our public educational institutions, administrators should see to it that these truths are taught more explicitly, and be infused throughout college life.

This is not to suggest that we ought to abandon tolerance for dissenting morality and religion. Western civilization has generally been expressly tolerant of dissenting traditions. Our ancestors, the ancient Greeks and their successors, were very eager to learn of the knowledge of other civilizations, even going as far as to adopt the superior values of other civilizations. Such was the case when the Greeks encountered the Jewish people. Over time, our ancestors began to reject their immoral paganism, as well as the immature philosophy, for the superiority of ethical monotheism. We know there is much we can learn if we remain tolerant.

This tolerance must be balanced by truth, as it is important that, if we seek to repair the decayed structure of our society, we recognize that there must exist a semblance of moral order. It is only through such a moral order that the liberty and justice that we value so highly can prevail. This is why it is essential that we leave the power of selecting administrators in the hands of our elders, and that our elders remain bound by the higher truths of God and by the wisdom of our ancestors.

Eric Magazu is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at emagazu@student.umass.edu.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

IN POOR TASTE

Dear editor:

Have the comic guys A.V. Waters and Knox Yeoman lost their minds? Moreover, has the Collegian staff gone mad? Someone has fallen asleep at their post. I am referring to the May 7 comic entitled, "Wesley Snipes Crawling Through a Tunnel." It is egregiously racist and definitely in poor taste. I, as an African American, find this offensive in every way. Even my friends who aren't African American are offended. I demand a formal retraction and apology.

Clifton E. Warren Jr.
UMass student

Editor's note: See retraction and apology on page 3.

DORM ROOM BLUES

Dear editor:

It doesn't come as a surprise to me that the brand-new housing system has turned the selection process into a bit of a fiasco. While allowing people to choose the exact room they will be living in seems like a good idea, there are obvious inherent flaws in the system that should have been accounted for. I'm sure the people who developed this particular housing system thought that they had made the process extremely fair, which it is if you have good housing priority.

For people with relatively low priority numbers, this system worked out great. Picking the exact room and not having to wait to see if you got placed in your first, second or third choice living area is great. This system even worked out well for many roommate pairs, because the option to form groups with a "leader" who had the best priority status probably saved many students from unpleasant living situations. The one area where this new process was a complete failure, however, was in the way that the system created a method of limiting the number of roommate pairs who could stay together on campus.

Two roommates who both have poor priority rank numbers will probably find themselves having to pick random roommates this semester. This new system allowed all of the good priority students who were roommateless to fill up vacant rooms, leaving only one space left instead of choosing a room that already had an occupant. The number of these single vacancy rooms is astounding; on May 5 in the Field dorm alone, there were around 50 or more such rooms. Students with priority numbers in the 2000-3000 range or higher found themselves having to break away from their roommate due to a complete lack of two vacancy doubles in three of the major living areas on campus. This outcome should have been obvious to the developers of the system; some rooms should have been reserved for pairs only in order to allow most roommate pairs to stick together. I believe that it's up to housing to remedy this problem; otherwise, there will most likely be a very large amount of roommate swapping going on next semester as people will attempt to get their old roommates back. A possible solution to this problem is to combine all of the single-occupied rooms on the floor every night, opening up a handful of doubles for the next day's selection process.

The "penalty" for having a poor priority rating is not getting to live in the dorm area that you want. Losing a beloved roommate should not be added to that.

Kara Jacobacci
UMass student

A NEEDED PRESCRIPTION

Dear editor:

Re: "Prescribing temperance," Solmaaz Yazdiba, Ed/Op, May 1, 2008

I have a 15-year-old son who attends a private school largely because of our fear of the medicating that is so prevalent in public schools.

The increasing suicide and homicidal behaviors of students is very obviously correlated with the use of drugs (rather than teaching methods) to address student behavior and learning. Even the FDA has published side effects of suicide and violence as black-box warnings.

Additionally, the stigmas, life-numbing and liveliness reducing these drugs carry makes life as a child quite dangerous these days. Famous educator Maria Montessori railed against keeping children chained to their desks because active movement and exploration teaches them how to coordinate their bodies, and how to handle and understand the physical Universe around them.

Let's face it, the only ones benefitting from this are the teachers (and parents!) who find their caretaking jobs easier, more manageable. But wait, aren't we supposed to be raising kids to be enthusiastic pursuers of life, self-motivated thinkers and "drug-free?" Witness the fact that out of the millions of drugged children, the far majority are boys.

Is boyhood a disease, or is it perhaps human nature that the physical bodies of boys are more energized and lively (just as bulls and stallions are more lively than mares and cows) than girls? Should we suppress this nature and lose all the benefits of a healthy male population? By tacit agreement with the prevailing "authorities," we are allowing the psychiatrist's critical views to run our lives and our future generations: "Children should be seen, not heard." "All behaviors and attitudes should be controlled," "Religion is a crutch," "The world is our patient base, because 'everyone is crazy,'" "All behaviors are due to brain chemicals, not social influences or human nature."

This, along with the obvious profit-motivation of drug companies, the "patient" is the victim, not the beneficiary. It's just too horrific to think about a future where the drugging of children and adults continues to escalate as it has in the last two decades. Additionally, I cringe to think my tax dollars are going to drug foster children (who have no parents to say "NO!"), soldiers and prisoners. And yet that is precisely where they are going.

Joanne Cali
Southborough, Mass.

MYSTERY MAN, NOT MYSTERY MEAT

Recently, I have seen at the Franklin 10 comment cards written by "Omar the Barbarian." This benevolent barbarian has primarily advocated for French Bread Pizza, and lo and behold it has been on the menu! He really cares about what the people want, and seems to hold some sway over Dining Services. Can you unmask this enigmatic savage?

Matthew M. Laquidara
UMass student

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian encourages reader responses. Signed letters to the editor should be no more than 350 words and can be sent to editorial@dailycollegian.com.

omar the barbarian saves busload of children ... SGA approves loan for koala rescue

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, MAY 8, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass RSO breaking down walls with dance

Seniors showcase original choreography at Mt. Holyoke

BY KATIE HUSTON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Every year, seniors in the University of Massachusetts dance department present a collection of original student choreography at the Alive With Dance concert. This year, however, six dancers are trying something different.

Tonight and tomorrow, they will present "All Walls Down" at the Kendall Studio Theater at Mt. Holyoke College. The event is sponsored by Alive With Dance (AWD), a registered student organization at UMass.

The show will feature pieces by Becky Anderson, Julie Bach, Christina Ferrara, Julia Forberg, Melissa Muse and Jordan Stout. Themes to be presented are based on research projects and include nostalgia, feminism and communication.

Jordan Stout, a senior dance and physics major whose work will be showcased in the concert, said the six artistic directors wanted to put on a "more non-traditional dance show" that showcases a diverse movement of styles, yet has a unified feel.

"We really wanted a cohesive show that has a lot of different choreography, but that also flows well together, because we feel like we have a lot of similar artistic tastes," Stout said.

The decision to establish a new concert was also motivated by logistics. Too many dancers were graduating to include all of their work in one concert, Stout said, so the artistic directors of "All Walls Down" began to look elsewhere.

At first, they considered the University Gallery or performing outdoors, but realized that could lead to a lot of logistical problems, Stout said, ultimately choosing the Kendall Studio Theater, a black box theater with bleacher seating.

Moving to a new venue – AWD is traditionally performed in the Bowker Auditorium on the UMass campus – offers the choreographers more opportunity to connect with their audience, Stout said.

"We're really excited about it, because it's a studio theater, which means it's a more intimate space. It allows us to make more innovative choices with our dances," Stout said.

What innovative choices? Stout didn't give away too much, but said dancers will walk into the audience as part of her piece. Choreographer Christina Ferrara opted to create several small pieces, rather than a larger work.

In the traditional Alive With Dance concert, which was performed two weeks ago, production decisions are made by an elected committee of dance majors, but not necessarily by the people making the dances, Stout said. For AWD II, the choreographers also make up the artistic committee.

Producing their own show has been empowering and exciting, Stout said.

"We're in charge of our show; we're the artistic directors," she said. "We have had the opportunity to see our show the entire way through, from concept to production to the final product. We have sole power to make any artistic choices we want."

"All Walls Down" will be performed tonight and Friday, May 9 at 8 p.m. Tickets are $5 for students and seniors and $10 for general admission.

Reservations are recommended; to reserve tickets, call (413) 545-2511.

Katie Huston can be reached at khuston@student.umass.edu

"ALL WALLS DOWN"

MAY 8 – 9
8 P.M.

MT. HOLYOKE

$5 – $10

COURTESY KRISTA MACKAY

Above: Megan Brown (left) and Julia Forberg rehearse a piece choreographed by Melissa Muse. Below: Artistic directors Jordan Stout (left) and Christina Ferrara watch a run-through on Monday. Cast members rehearse every night on the week leading up to the performance.

Unique language unites cultures

Amherst club keeps speaking Esperanto

BY ANDREA MURRAY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's a late afternoon on Tuesday at the Bluewall Cafe and Steven Brewer, the founding father of the Amherst Esperanto Club, is telling a story about a man he knows through Esperanto, Dave Coffin from Andover, Mass.

Coffin went to an Esperanto conference in Russia where he met a Russian woman and fell in love. They moved back to the U.S., and they have two kids. She speaks Russian to the kids. They all speak Esperanto together as the official house language because that is the only language that Coffin and his wife share in common. The children are learning their English from TV and school.

Esperanto seems to be the new language of love. The group told numerous love stories in which two people who only had Esperanto in common fell in love and never learned each other's native languages.

Dr. L. L. Zamenhof invented Esperanto and published the first book in 1887 under the pseudonym "Dr. Esperanto." The word Esperanto means "one who hopes." The language was created to allow communication between people of different lands and cultures. Interest in the language peaked in the 1970s.

Sometimes criticized for being sexist and sounding too artificial, it currently has not fulfilled its original intent of becoming a universal language. Some have even complained that Esperanto could take away from native languages, but that is not the intent.

"It is important to note that Esperanto is not meant to replace native languages, but it is meant to be every person's first second language," says Julie Winberg, an active member of the club.

Today, there are about 2 million Esperanto speakers, about 1,000 of whom are native speakers. At the University of Massachusetts, a loyal group of followers still practice the language. They meet each week to discuss readings and practice speaking in Esperanto, the most widely used international auxiliary language.

UMass Professor of Biology and Amherst resident Steven Brewer founded the Esperanto group about five years ago. He met other Esperanto speakers, like Sali Lawton of Westhampton, on the Internet. His mother, Lucy Brewer, is another attendee.

The sound is hard to describe, but it's closest to a mix of German and Spanish. Winberg says that people often think that it sounds like whatever languages they know. She once thought that it sounded like Italian but her Italian friends firmly disagreed.

Everyone in the group seems to agree that learning Esperanto opens doors, especially in the travel world.

Esperanto is a phonetic language that uses no silent letters. Esperanto.net says that about 75 percent of the language comes from Latin and Romance languages, about 20 percent from Germanic languages and the rest

See ESPERANTO on page 10

COURTESY ANDREA MURRAY

The UMass Esperanto Club discusses the language in the Campus Center's Blue Wall. Esperanto was created in 1887 with hopes of becoming a world-wide means of communication.

Theater Guild to confront controversial issue in play

BY JOE STAHL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts Theater Guild (UMTG) is back again for its last performance of the semester. This time, the UMTG will be doing its own production of the contemporary play "Stop Kiss." The UMTG will take hold of the Renaissance Theater at 650 E. Pleasant St. on May 8 through May 10.

In the past year, the UMTG has done three major performances. It kicked off the fall 2007 semester with the passionate Spanish play "Blood Wedding," then performed an interpretation of the poem-based musical "The Wild Party." In the current semester, the UMTG did a production of "Godspell," which generously gave the UMTG and countless other playhouses in the past the creative freedom to make interesting musical approaches and alternative production styles.

Generally, the UMTG hosts its shows in auditoriums like Bowker or the Student Union Ballroom. The Center for Renaissance Studies is an unfamiliar setting for the UMTG, but hopefully it won't throw off the cohesiveness of this student organization that has been running since 1936.

The play in UMTG's current playbill, "Stop Kiss," written by Diana Son, is an honest and modern look at a lesbian love affair gone awry. The lead characters in the play are Callie, played by freshman Linda Tardif, and Sara, played by sophomore Jess Leader. Taking place in New York City, a more experienced city girl, Callie, lends a helping hand to Sara, a timid but starry-eyed girl from St. Louis who finds companionship in Callie. Soon, their budding friendship turns into something more, as sexual tension begins to develop. It is the perfect example of a friends-to-lovers story.

The two girls share a kiss in a park where a disapproving, homophobic person attacks them. Sara is severely injured and falls into a coma. Throughout the main plotline, despair and confusion plagues the lives of the other characters in Sara and Callie's lives.

Before leaving St. Louis to move to New York, Sara left behind her boyfriend Peter (played by Patrick Walsh), who is still madly in love with her. When Peter finds out that someone in the park ambushed her, he comes to her aid.

Callie is also put into a predicament with her "friend with benefits" George, played by freshman Andy Ferlo. George is a bartender in the city and has been physical with Callie in the past. He begins to show signs of agitation because of Callie and Sara's close relationship.

With a play that takes place in the present, Son critically asks daunting questions about society and the influence it has on the decisions people make about relationships. Despite the heaviness of the plotline, Son embeds sincerity and affection into her modern characters and also includes satirical elements. The subordinate conflicts that are intertwined in the main issue are seasoned with comic spirit, but serious dialogue is still kept intact.

"Stop Kiss" is not just a story of oppressed lesbians who happened to get assaulted. It is not only a reminder of the homophobia that still exists in the world. The play is a multi-faceted exploration of a homosexual relationship and how it affects the closest people in the women's lives. The characters are multi-dimensional and authentic. They are faced with real problems, which is why the play hits so close to home and is overtly sentimental.

The UMTG will be displaying their take on "Stop Kiss" later this week. Performances are Thursday through Saturday, May 8-10 at 8 p.m., with a matinee performance at 2 p.m. on May 10. Tickets, which will be sold at the door, are $5 for students and $10 for general admission. The Renaissance Theater only has a capacity of 40 to 50 people, so reserve your tickets by sending an e-mail to UMTGtickets@sgmail.com.

Joe Stahl can be reached at jstahl@student.umass.edu.

"STOP KISS"

MAY 8 - 10

RENAISSANCE CENTER

$5 – $10

COURTESY HANAS INGUM

"Stop Kiss," the UMTG's spring play, was written by Diana Son.

Superheroes on display at Met

Celebrities honor comic book creations at New York art gala

BY HEATHER WAXMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts was not the only one commemorating superheroes this week, when the superhero-themed Orchard Hill Bowl Weekend took place.

Celebrities donned their superhero finest this past Monday at the annual Metropolitan Museum of Art Costume Gala, honoring the Museum's latest venture: delving into the ties between fictional characters and fashion.

The new exhibition, "Superheroes: Fashion and Fantasy," was conceived by the legendary Giorgio Armani, and features roughly 60 ensembles ranging from movie costumes to avant-garde haute couture to high-performance sportswear.

Armani served as the Honorary Chair of the Gala alongside fellow co-chairs George Clooney, Julia Roberts and Anna Wintour, Editor-in-Chief of "Vogue."

The exhibit aims to portray how the superhero not only serves as the utmost representation for fashion, but also possesses the ability to transform the human body.

The display, located in the Museum's first floor special exhibition galleries, manifests various movie costumes and fanatic fashion statements, both directly and indirectly referring to the notion of the superhero's iconic status.

Bernhard Wilhem's 2006 royal blue dress flaunts Superman's trademark red-and-yellow "S-shield," while a lengthy leather Balenciaga jacket, accompanied by eccentric bronze leggings, evokes Iron Man's metallic skin.

Everyone who is anyone in young Hollywood made their way to the Met's notorious event, including actresses-gone-style-icons Kate Bosworth, Mischa Barton, and Scarlett Johansson, as well as Mary-Kate and Ashley Olsen.

Tabloid-friendly power-couples also graced the red carpet, including David and Victoria Beckham, Tom Cruise and Katie Holmes, Jennifer Lopez and Marc Anthony, and Tom Brady and Gisele Bundchen.

"Today, superhero imagery has suffused almost every aspect of popular culture," said Andrew Bolton, Curator in the Metropolitan Museum's Costume Institute in a recent interview posted on the Museum's website.

"The superhero's iconic costume of cape, mask and bodysuit finds many fashionable permutations. But fashion's embrace of the super hero extends beyond iconography, to issues of identity, sexuality and nationalism."

Bolton organized the exhibit with the help of Harold Koda, Curator in Charge. Nathan Crowley, a production designer of such films as "Batman Begins" and this summer's upcoming flick "The Dark Knight," serves as the exhibit's creative consultant and also contributed to the Gala's design with Raul Avila.

A book, also entitled "Superheroes: Fashion and Fantasy," published by The Metropolitan Museum of Art and distributed by Yale University Press, serves as a companion to the exhibition.

Various screenings of "Superman II," "Batman Returns," "X-Men," and "Spider-Man" are available for viewing pleasure in addition to a series of family programs featuring a one-hour introduction to the exhibition.

The Museum's Web site, Metmuseum.org, contains a Special Exhibitions Page on Superheroes, complete with an interactive flipbook, portraying a slew of comic book images, movie stills, catalogue excerpts and fashion show highlights, as well as commentaries from movie costume designers themselves.

Heather Waxman can be reached at hwaxman@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY WARNER BROS.

The Met recently revealed its Superheroes display.

Correction to 5/7 article "Art on display at FAC"

The Festival of Arts will be at the Fine Arts Center on Friday, May 9 from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m., not today as suggested in yesterday's headline.

One Shel of a performance

BY SARA AFZAL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Two actors walked onto the stage; a woman wearing nothing but a towel, and a man in his underwear. They began to argue about the man's choice to play Russian roulette, which is spinning the cylinder of a revolver loaded with only a single bullet, and pulling the trigger.

This one-act play, entitled "Click," opened "A Shel Silverstein Evening," a student-directed performance of author Shel Silverstein's short plays and poetry last Friday and Saturday evening in the Fine Arts Center of the University of Massachusetts.

"Click" is not a work that most people associate with Silverstein, who is most known for his children's books such as "The Giving Tree" and "Where the Sidewalk Ends."

Indeed, the aim of "A Shel Silverstein Evening" was to expose the audience to Silverstein's adult literature, while also revisiting his childhood stories and poetry, said Jenna-Lee Carreiro, the director and a senior theater major.

The children's poem, "Hug O' War," was performed by assistant director and 2006 theater alumnus Troy David Mercier. Mercier recited the poem in a high-pitched voice and held up a white stuffed animal bear over his face. Towards the end of the poem, two other cast members joined him, holding pink stuffed animal bears, while the song "Let's Get It On" by Marvin Gaye started playing. The assumption that the stuffed animal bears were going to "get it on" brought laughs to the audience.

The performance had a total of seven cast members, including Crystal Chasse, Tyler Wilkinson, Kaitlin Hayden, Leanne Sims and Emily Cordes.

Although Carreiro directed the show, she also starred as the wife in "Click," along with Mercier as the Russian roulette player.

The one-act "Buy One Get One Free" was performed by Crystal Chasse and Emily Cordes. It depicted one of Silverstein's more racy dialogues about two prostitutes who sell themselves with the slogan "Buy One Get One Free." At the end of the performance a man actually showed up, ready to take the offer.

Other poetry performed included "I Won't Hatch," "Point of View," and "The Meeboo with an Exactlywatt."

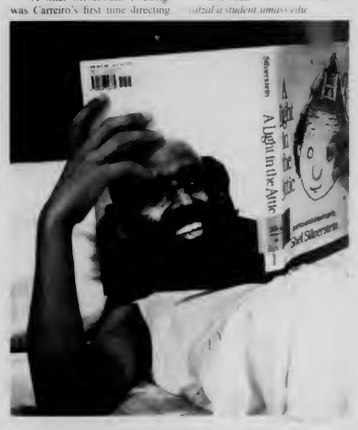
During the one-act play "The Lifeboat is Sinking," actors Wilkinson and Hayden acted as a husband and wife who play a hypothetical game. The wife questioned her husband about what he would do if their lifeboat was sinking in a rainstorm. The comedic impact was achieved when the wife was happy that her husband chose to save their daughter instead of his mother, who would be thrown off of the lifeboat.

Since February, both Carreiro and Mercier helped the cast to develop their characters by asking them to think about their character's life history, or what the character was doing before the scene.

"Jenna and Troy left it really up to us to develop our characters. They sometimes gave us hints. Troy told me to use stuttering during 'K'," said Sims. During the poem "K," Sims's character stuttered each time she said a word starting with the letter K, which resulted in laughter from the audience.

"A Shel Silverstein Evening" was Carreiro's first time directing and she learned so much from Troy, who is more experienced, and from the cast on just how to work with people and to get what you want out of a performance," said Carreiro.

A UMass alum, Mercier has directed four other shows and has been actively involved in theater since his graduation in 2006.



"I have a passion for creating new works of theater. I don't want to 'do' a show. I want to pioneer the future of theatre," said Mercier.

Sponsored by theater professor and academic advisor Milan Dragicevich, the theater department provided the use of room 204 in the Fine Arts Center, which has a stage, light stand, sound system and chairs. According to Carreiro besides purchasing props at the dollar store, there were no other expenses for the show.

Carreiro wanted to direct her own show to give opportunities to students who did not get cast in UMass productions.

"I think a lot of talent is hidden in the department and no one gets to see how fantastic these students are," said Carreiro.

Sara Afzal can be reached at safzal@student.umass.edu.

The one-act play, "Click," kicked off a student-directed rendition of Silverstein's short plays and poetry, entitled "A Shel Silverstein Evening."

Take Out a classifieds ad

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN

now offers free online classifieds for students at

WWW.UMASSLIST.COM

- More complete, local and relevant category listings than any and all competitor web sites combined
- Users can setup daily e-mail updates for relevant listings. No more searching for apartments, now they come to you.
- Post unlimited online listings
- Little to no spam

By listing on this site you are supporting your local college newspaper, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Got trash?

Dump your apartment cleanout garbage in the right place:

Bring your student ID to get in!

The Amherst Transfer Station

Trash, furniture, mattresses, TVs, computers & appliances accepted

Disposal fees apply

740 Belchertown Road (Route 9), 2 miles East of Dunkin Doughnuts

Open 8am-2pm Tuesdays, Thursdays, & Saturdays

For more information, visit www.amherstma.gov/recycling or call the Amherst Dept. of Public Works 413-259-3050

IT'S ALL ABOUT PEANUTS!

FRIDAY, MAY 9, 2008
WORCESTER DC
5-9 PM

MENU:

PEANUT SOUP SIPPER

VEGETABLE SALAD WITH PEANUT SAUCE

PAN SEARED SALMON WITH GINGER-LIME SAUCE & PEANUTS

CHICKEN SATAY

CHOCOLATE PEANUT BUTTER ICE CREAM

2007 Grand Prize

ivy

DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst

GOOBER GOOD!

National Peanut Board

Esperanto tradition stays strong

ESPERANTO from page 8

comes from Slavic languages and Greek. Word order is not important in Esperanto, and there are few grammar rules.

Brewer and Winberg shared a few simple grammar rules: all words that end in "o" are nouns; diphthongs, vowel sequences pronounced as a single new sound, make words plural; "la" means "the," no matter what. There is no difference between feminine, masculine and plural case.

Winberg lectures on topics like women travelers at the World Conferences of Esperanto. She was once the President of the Women's Commission of the World Esperanto Association. She has traveled all through Eastern Europe using only Esperanto because the only other language she knows is English. Winberg says that wherever she went, she found some people who spoke Esperanto.

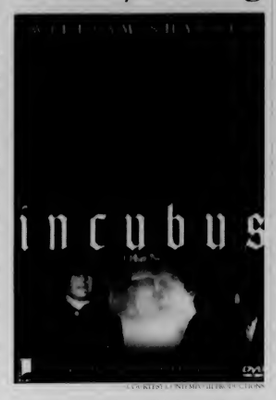
Lawton, a fourth grade teacher for 11 years, is another long-time member. She learned the language in 1985, and soon began volunteering to teach Esperanto to her students during summer breaks.

"After the kids got out of fourth grade they would come up to me and say 'I still have my Esperanto papers!'" says Lawton.

Esperanto has its own original literature, including books and magazines as well as movies. Monato is a popular all-Esperanto magazine. There are over 25,000 Esperanto books, originals and translations, in existence. Zamenhof even translated the "Old Testament" into the language.

"Incubus," made in 1965 starring William Shatner, used Esperanto not because of its popularity, but for the exotic sound of it. The film was the first American motion picture completely in Esperanto.

Esperanto.net says that it is easier to learn than national languages. The Amherst Esperanto club recommends using Lernu.net to learn Esperanto quickly and free of charge.



"I have chatted with people online in Esperanto and at the end of the conversation asked them, 'So how long have you been speaking Esperanto?' and they say, 'Oh, last week,'" says Brewer.

Brewer is the director of the Biology Research Center at the University of Massachusetts and is fluent in English, Spanish and Esperanto. He says that he became fluent in Esperanto in just six months but it took him years of book study to become fluent in Spanish. He learned Esperanto as a graduate student but regrets not studying it earlier on.

"I wish that I had learned it as an undergraduate because I could have made connections and traveled more," says Brewer.

Brewer has taken advantage of the camaraderie among his fellow Esperantists. Other Esperantists are often very willing to let other speakers stay in their homes because they have the language in common. The Amherst Esperanto Club is just a small division of the Esperanto family.

Andrea Murray can be reached at amurray@student.umass.edu

"Incubus," a 1965 horror flick, featured Esperanto for its unique and exotic sound.

Microsoft Zune challenges iPods

By Mike Wendland
Detroit Free Press

Microsoft is attempting to win fans by releasing the Zune, its own version of Apple's popular iPod.

You gotta hand it to Microsoft. When it comes to their competition with Apple over the iPod, Microsoft has patience, perseverance and an innovative new plan to use social networking to win fans for its rival Zune music player.

The Zune, which has evolved into a pretty sophisticated and iPod-looking multicolored gizmo since its clunky soap-bar-shaped debut umits, has just enabled a feature that lets users download their friends' nine most recently listened to songs, as well as nine others that their pals have tagged as favorites.

It's all done through the community Web site called Zune Social, an alternative to the iTunes online store used by Apple. To get the new song trading feature, users have to subscribe to a $14.95-a-month mobile music service Microsoft calls Zune Pass. With it, subscribers have total access to the 3.5 million songs in the Zune library and can download as many of them as they want, as often as they want.

The latest software update to the Zune enables the music sharing features.

Also new for the Zune are TV shows from NBC, which used to be on iTunes. No more. Now NBC, a longtime partner with Microsoft on technology, has moved them to the Zune online store. Microsoft has 800 episodes of shows from Turner Broadcasting, Comedy Central and NBC now available for purchase and downloading on the Zune.

It's a drop in the bucket to what Apple offers, with its thousands of TV shows and its 71 percent iPod market share.

But the Zune has not disappeared, as many speculated, and as the latest announcements show, Microsoft seems ready for a long fight.

Real chance to 'phone home'

New SETI satellites to search for extraterrestrial intelligence

By Carrie Peyton Dahlberg
McClatchy Newspapers

HAT CREEK, Calif. — Dotting a rocky plain north of Mount Lassen, 42 radio antennas are cocked like ears toward the sky, being readied for an expanded hunt for life beyond Earth.

The Allen Telescope Array is slowly coming together as the new listening post for SETI, the Search for Extraterrestrial Intelligence.

Here at the Hat Creek Radio Observatory, silver-snouted antennas soon will take up the quest for a technological culture that is audacious or lonely or hopeful enough to deliberately beam a signal into the beyond.

It would be a sort of cosmic "Hey, is anybody out there?"

This summer, when the alien-hunting function of the telescope array is expected to start coming online, only a powerfully blasted or very close message would get through.

The array is missing 308 of the 350 antennas that the SETI Institute once hoped to have installed by this year. And equipment is still arriving to enable SETI operators to simultaneously focus on key stars while the antennas are also used in other research.

The San Francisco Bay Area-based SETI Institute is dedicated to understanding the origins and prevalence of life throughout the universe. The scrappy nonprofit, which decorates some antennas with donor names and advertises an "adopt a scientist" program on its Web site, is scrambling for $35 million to $40 million needed to finish the array.

Even then, "finish" isn't quite the right word. Beyond 350 antennas, some researchers speak wistfully of what they might do with 500.

"There's always hope," said Peter Backus, manager of the institute's observational programs.

SETI runs on hope, fueled by yearning for the breathtaking long shot of alien contact. But its telescope is grounded in pragmatism.

The institute has teamed with the University of California at Berkeley's Radio Astronomy Laboratory to create a radio telescope that already has begun making wide, rapid surveys of gases in the sky.

"They're doing a lot of things no one has done before," said Chris Carilli, a radio astronomer with the National Radio Astronomy Observatory in New Mexico, who is currently involved in telescope development in Chile.

"Even with 42 antennas, it will be an impressive survey instrument ... really a uniquely powerful instrument," Carilli said.

The Allen array relies on multiple, small antennas to create a bigger picture. The complex electronic "back end" of the telescope can be turned into four different instruments, all using the same antennas for different purposes.

Only one of those instruments is devoted to the SETI search. Others are aimed at mapping galaxies, probing how stars are formed, and capturing the distant drama of black holes feeding and supernovas exploding.

Unlike optical telescopes, which measure stars and other objects in the visible spectrum, radio telescopes tune into the wavelengths emitted by solid objects, gases and electrons whirling through space.

The Allen array can observe at a wide range of radio wave frequencies, producing detailed inventories across broad swaths of sky.

"We generate an amazing amount of data," said Rick Forster, resident astronomer at the remote observatory, which lies amid sage, deer brush and scattered pines off Highway 89 southeast of Burney in eastern Shasta County, Calif.

Forster, who will turn 60 this month, has spent his career in conventional radio astronomy, examining gases, galaxies and other structures to help understand how the universe is put together. He lives for that moment when an experiment he designed has been performed and he's facing a mountain of data, about to plunge in, seeking conclusions.

"It's the thrill of the hunt," Forster said. "You know there's an Easter egg in there, and you have to work for it. ... I just love it."

Since the Allen array's first three antennas went up in 2005, much of Forster's time has been devoted to questions involved in engineering, calibrating and testing.

Among astronomers, the telescope's progress is being followed closely because its solutions to technical problems could be incorporated into the next generation of much larger radio telescopes.

Some of the issues have been as complex as how to squeeze the most performance out of hardware and software that will focus SETI's search. Other problems have been as down to earth as to how to dim overly bright antennas.

The radio dishes don't need to gleam, and astronomers had promised the Forest Service that they wouldn't, so that reflected sunlight would not hamper the wilderness experience for hikers on the Pacific Crest Trail just three miles east of the observatory.

When the equipment showed up shinier than expected, technicians began a tedious process of disassembling each antenna, blasting the curved dish with baking soda to dull the surface, then putting its delicate innards back in place. This week, the ground below some antennas was still dusted white with baking soda.

It has cost about $50 million so far to design, create and install the 42 antennas that make up the first phase of the Allen Telescope Array, named for Microsoft co-founder Paul Allen, whose foundation donated $25 million to the effort.

Other funds have come from private donors, UC Berkeley and the National Science Foundation.

Because so much expensive design and development work has been done, the remaining 308 antennas will be much cheaper, probably coming in under $40 million, said Jill Tarter, SETI director.

There is no firm timetable for completion, because that money is not in hand.

"If I had a check today, it would be two years," Tarter said.

The Search for Extraterrestrial Intelligence, more commonly known as SETI, recently installed the Allen Telescope Array in California. They hope these additional antennae will detect life on other planets.

Apartments Available for Summer and Fall

Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.

PUFFTON VILLAGE

Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Check us out on Facebook!

Advance your career, develop new skills and help the environment... all in one place.

Hire Smart. Train Well. Out Perform.

Ask anyone who works here, and they'll tell you that the culture at Triumvirate Environmental is hardworking, fun, and exciting.

If you want to work for a company where mentoring and training are keys to success, we'd like to talk to you.

We are currently hiring ENTRY LEVEL ENVIRONMENTAL SPECIALISTS at our Boston, New York & Baltimore area offices.

Interested candidates should call our Human Resources Department at 800.966.9282, or e-mail us at careers@triumvirate.com

TRIUMVIRATE ENVIRONMENTAL

SKYPLEX

18 Plus College Night
Thursdays
The #1 Place to Party!
3 Different Rooms/3 DJ's spinning the best in Top 40, Dance, House and Select Mashup

THE ULTIMATE HOT BODY CONTEST

$100 Best Male $100 Best Female

The Hottest 19 Plus SATURDAY NIGHT Dance Party

NOW HIRING!
Bartenders Barback
Cashiers Waitstaff
Security Staff

SATURDAYS

SkyPlex 10 Stearns Sq Downtown Springfield 413 827 9000 www.SkyPlex.us

Numbness down, numbers up

Sanders improves consistency after learning of syndrome

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

Thoracic outlet syndrome sounds painful.

The most painful part of the condition for Massachusetts softball pitcher Bailey Sanders, however, was losing so much feeling in her throwing hand that she didn't have the strength to throw a softball and could only watch as her teammates pressed on without her.

This was one year ago at the NCAA Regionals in Amherst, hosted by UMass. The Minutewomen lost twice to No. 1 seed Oklahoma, 2-0 and 6-3, on May 19 and 20, falling short of making another run at the Women's College World Series.

"It was frustrating. I had never had to sit out before," Sanders says. "I was watching my teammates and thinking, 'That should be me.'"

Sanders joined the Minutewomen as the perfect complement to the team's ace, Brandice Balschmiter. UMass coach Elaine Sortino had found the ideal pair. Balschmiter's overpowering fastball was now teamed with Sanders' arsenal of movement pitches with vicious spin.

All of that was derailed when it was needed the most in the postseason. Balschmiter pitched all but two innings of the regional round, going 2-2; both losses at the hands of the Sooners.

Nearly a full year later, Sanders, now a sophomore, is part of a UMass team poised to claim its 20th Atlantic 10 championship in its history. The Minutewomen face Fordham today at 2 p.m. in the second round of the tournament. If they can repeat as conference champs for the fourth straight year, they will be back in NCAA Tournament, where Sanders will have another chance to help her team make a push for the Women's College World Series.

The strange part of the story is that she may not have been able to play this year had she not discovered the problem 12 months ago. And if she wasn't a softball pitcher, she may have gone her entire life not knowing she suffered from the condition.

Thoracic outlet syndrome occurs when the space between the first rib and the clavicle (where the subclavian artery and several clusters of veins and nerves pass from the chest to the arms and neck) is smaller than it needs to be. Sometimes, this can cause constant problems for the patient, generating pain or numbness down one arm that has been known to be mistaken for carpal tunnel syndrome, among other conditions.

Bailey's situation was exacerbated anytime she lifted her arm over her head. As a pitcher in softball, that motion is somewhat necessary. However, as a three-sport athlete in high school, the problem was likely developing for years. Bailey was not only a pitcher (and talented hitter), but a four-year letterwinner as a swimmer who specialized in the backstroke and an all-state volleyball player.

"She was predisposed to this [condition]," Sortino says. "All three of those sports send your arm over your head all the time, and think about how much she pitches. Her arm is winding around over her head all the time."

Bailey says she began feeling numbness in her finger during the 2007 season, and by the time the team reached the opening round of the NCAA Tournament, the numbness spread to her entire hand, and she could not hold onto a softball.

Every time Bailey threw a pitch, that space where those arteries and nerves passed would close, causing blood clots to travel down her arm where they built up in the two primary arteries in her forearm. One of the arteries became backed up from her hand to her elbow, while the other had a two-inch clot in the wrist.

"It was definitely a bit scary, and it happened at the worst time possible," Bailey says.

She pitched just two innings during the tournament — which was two innings more than doctors had originally cleared her for — but those two innings were the final two for UMass that season, losing to the Sooners, 6-3, for the second time that weekend.

After the season, Sanders spent six months working her way back into playing form. On July 3, Bailey's first rib on her right side — only a few inches long — was removed at Mass General Hospital. That allowed the blood to flow more freely and prevented any future clots from forming.

A month later on Aug. 9, Bailey underwent a second surgery to remove the clots in her arm. Doctors used one of the veins in her forearm to replace the most badly clotted artery. Luckily, the first replacement went well enough that the second clogged artery did not require surgery.

All that remains from the ordeal is an eight-inch, zig-zag shaped scar that runs the length of her forearm and a sophomore pitcher who is throwing harder than ever.

"As of right now, I have full feeling in my hand," Bailey says with her usual extra-wide smile. "I've never had another episode, so I'm cured."

By October, Bailey was cleared to begin pitching again, which really meant it was finally safe for her to lift her arm over her head. In November, she went back to working out full-time and preparing for 2008. She missed the entire fall season to rehab but worked her way back into playing shape in time to start the season.

On Feb. 8, the first day of the regular season, Bailey started the Minutewomen's second game, a 2-1 loss to Maryland, going six innings and giving up three hits. She finished the year fourth in the A-10 with a 11-5 record and a 1.88 ERA.

"It's a miracle," Sortino says. "It's really exciting to see her now. She looks good. I don't think I've ever had a kid work harder than that kid."

Sortino's plan eventually worked out. Sanders and Balschmiter have entered games in relief of one another and started back-to-back games in doubleheaders, carrying UMass to a perfect 20-0 record in conference this season.

"They're a nice complement to each other," Sortino says. "This is what I had hoped for last year. It just took a little bit longer to work it out."

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu

Bailey Sanders has developed into a great compliment to junior Brandice Balschmiter on UMass's pitching staff after an inconsistent freshman season.

Bailey Sanders spent the offseason recovering after she had two surgeries to repair the damage she suffered as a result of thoradic outlet syndrome. She has an 11-5 record to go with her 1.88 ERA.

Daily Collegian Sports Blog

Check out the Daily Collegian's new sports blog sponsored by MassLive for live updates of UMass games and breaking news about your favorite UMass teams.

http://blog.masslive.com/dailycollegiansports/

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL - W. SPFLD

Special Student Rate

Local-National Placement

Includes Certification

1-800-357-3210

BostonBartender.com

Got trash?

Dump your apartment cleanout garbage in the right place:

The Amherst Transfer Station

Accepts trash, furniture, mattresses, books, TVs, computers & appliances, etc. Disposal fees apply

Bring your student ID to get in!

Open 8am-2pm Tuesday, Thursday, & Saturday

740 Belchertown Road (Route 9)
2 miles East of Dunkin Doughnuts

For more information, visit www.amherstma.gov/recycling
Or call the Amherst Department of Public Works 413-259-3050

Looking for a Job?

The Daily Collegian

is seeking hard-working, motivated undergrads to fill our Advertising Representative Positions.

To Apply:
Contact Dan Hurley or Brendan Cherry
@ 545-3500 for more information.

•Excellent business experience!
•Gain valuable sales experience
•Get credits for work
•Build your resume

*SOM students strongly encouraged to apply.

A night to remember...

WORLD STREET FOOD WITH LOCAL FLAVORS

Join us and sample food from Singapore, Thailand, Europe, and Mediterranean prepared by our award-winning Chefs. Specialty wines will be served.

MARRIOTT CENTER, 11TH FLOOR, CAMPUS CENTER

CHEF WILLIE SNG (EXECUTIVE CHEF)

CHEF CHI CUONG HUYNH (EXECUTIVE SOUS-CHEF OF CATERING)

Thursday May 15 5 to 8pm

CHEF SIMON STEVENSON (PASTRY CHEF)

ASSISTED BY JENNIFER ANDRÉN (CHEF INSTRUCTOR OF HTM)

RSVP BY MONDAY, MAY 12
For reservations or more information call:
UMass Catering 413-577-1234 or e-mail fsc@mail.aux.umass.edu

Pricing: $20 in advance, $25 at the door • Proceeds go to HTM Scholarship Fund

DINING SERVICES

ISENBERG

ivy

Co-hosted by UMass Catering and Department of Hospitality and Tourism Management

Sponsored by: Great Wall Restaurant, Amey's Food Products, Thurston Foods, Joe Czajkowski's Farm, MS Walker, North Coast Seafoods, UMass Auxiliary Services.

Fordham, SJU, Charlotte advance

Saint Louis eliminated in 1st day of A-10 Tournament

By Jeff R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

The 2008 Atlantic 10 Softball Tournament started yesterday with two 1-0 pitcher's duels. Fourth-seeded Fordham and fifth-seeded Saint Joseph's played the first of three games, while Game 2 saw No. 3 seed and host school Charlotte square off with No. 6 Saint Louis.

The losers of the day's first two games fought in Game 3 to keep their tournaments alive; like most softball tournaments, the A-10 Tournament is double-elimination. The winner of Game 1 faces top-seeded Massachusetts today, who has won 38 consecutive A-10 games. Game 2's winner will see No. 2 St. Bonaventure in the second game of today's action.

Fordham vs. St. Joe's

Yesterday's first game saw a 1-0 pitcher's duel, with Fordham walking off the field as victors.

Both teams managed to move many of their runners into scoring position, but failed to bring them home. The Hawks had two opportunities with a runner on third and one out but could not capitalize.

Fordham's senior pitcher Allison Twarowski came up big in her complete game shutout, anytime runners were in scoring position. Twarowski and Dani Gonzales of St. Joe's had similar pitching lines. Each gave up four hits and struck out five in their outings.

Gonzales started out the day stronger, not allowing a hit until the third inning and striking out three in the first two innings.

Twarowski was not as dominant in the first half of the game. After shutting down the Hawks' top three in order in the first, Twarowski gave up a hit in each of the next three innings.

She found a groove in the end of the fourth that carried her through the next two innings. The senior struck out the side in the fifth and followed up with another strikeout in the sixth; she retired the next three in order as well.

While Twarowski got in a rhythm, Gonzales showed her first signs of slowing down. After getting the side to ground out in the fourth and the first out of the fifth, the junior gave up her second hit to Jocelyn Dearborn.

With a runner on first, Gonzales induced the next batter, freshman Samantha Pellechio, to hit a ground-ball, but with an error by shortstop Dana Bieniek, the Rams had runners on first and second.

Fordham did what St. Joe's could not do in the previous three innings – drive in runners in scoring position. Next up for the Rams was freshman Meghan Shager, who singled to center-field to drive in Dearborn and put Fordham on top, 1-0.

Gonzales got the next two batters out to end the inning but the damage had been done. The Hawks' would threaten in the top of the seventh but again struggled to drive in runners, stranding the tying run 90 feet away.

Charlotte vs. Saint Louis

Game 2 unfolded much like the first. St. Louis got a strong outing from its starter, sophomore Stacy Gillette (5 2/3 innings, seven strikeouts and one walk), all while giving up one earned run, but the Billikens had no offense to support her.

Freshman Katy Hackett gave up three hits in her seven shutout innings and struck out seven; she also walked two and hit a batter.

St. Louis found itself in the position to drive in runs on many occasions, but failed to do so. For three straight innings, from the second through the fourth, St. Louis had a runner on second with no more than one out, but stranded the runner. The Billikens would not get a hit for the rest of the game.

As for the 49ers, they could not hit anything out of the infield until the fourth inning, when outfielder Serena Smith singled through the left side. The hit did not amount to anything but showed signs of slowing down for Gillette.

In the top of the sixth, it appeared the Billikens would break the 0-0 tie when junior shortstop Rachel Heet led off the inning with a walk. Heet stole second when Hackett struck out sophomore Nicki Jost and followed by stealing third. With one out and a runner on third, first basemen Katie Johns grounded to second base.

Heet was running on the play and Charlotte's second basemen Sarah Malene threw her out at the plate.

After loading the bases off a walk and two singles, Charlotte finally broke the tie off a single from Smith, her second hit of the game, driving in junior Jenny Rumbles from third.

Hackett sat down the side in order in the top of the seventh, sealing the 49ers victory, and sending them face St. Bonaventure today.

SLU vs. St. Joe's

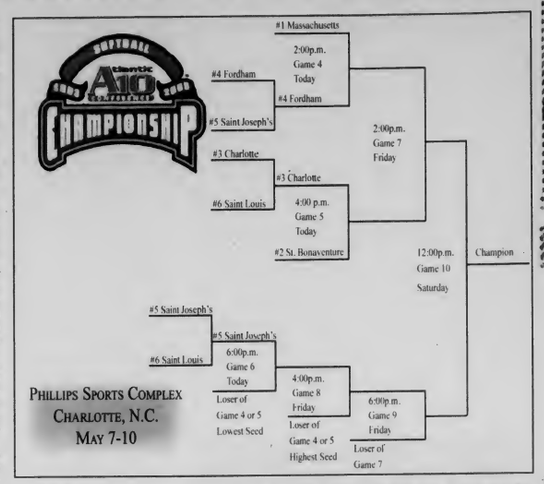
With their tournament lives on the line, St. Louis and St. Joe's hoped to get some offense going after being shutout and struggling to drive in runners.

St. Louis was playing shortly after its loss to Charlotte, and quickly did what they could not in its previous game.

After freshman Kristen Nicoletti reached first on an error by the Billikens' third basemen Sue Lebow, Nicoletti stole second and then advanced to third on a ground out to third base. St. Louis got its first run of the day when Heet hit a sacrifice fly to left field.

The Hawks responded in the bottom of the inning on a sacrifice fly to left, driving in freshman Laura Cordone to knot the game at one. The Hawks scored another in the third off a RBI double by Rosenwinkel.

In the fourth, the Billikens twice had runners thrown out at the plate, to record the last two outs of the inning leaving the bases loaded.



St. Joe's would go on to score two more off a two-run home run by Rosenwinkel in the fifth. The junior outfielder finished the day 2-of-3 with a home run, a double and three RBIs.

The Hawks won, 4-1, eliminating SLU from the tournament. They will play the third game today against the lowest-seeded loser of tomorrow's first two games.

Jeff R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard a student.umass.edu.

Freshman pitcher Katy Hackett allowed three hits over seven shutout innings in Charlotte's 1-0 win over Saint Louis yesterday.

A-10 Softball

Normandin becoming force

NORMANDIN from page 14

batting order. With Normandin struggling, Sortino moved her to the ninth spot.

"Even if you look at the way she started, she wasn't consistent because she didn't trust herself and didn't have the playing experience of a young thoroughbred," Sortino said.

"[Coach Sortino] knew that I could do it, and she just wanted me to believe in my athleticism and let my natural talent take over and to not think about it," Normandin said.

Normandin thrived in the ninth spot and after playing on the road for the first half of the season, UMass started playing home games and A-10 opponents. She exploded in A-10 play, batting .436. She felt the move in the batting order helped because there is less pressure in the ninth spot. She feels that she is gaining an advantage by seeing the pitchers approach against the first eight batters.

"It was our hope that Carly would break out this year because what she needed was the time and the opportunity," Sortino said.

Normandin hasn't got much advice lately from Sortino, as the team is about to play in the A-10 Tournament in North Carolina today.

"Usually when people are hitting well, she tends not to say anything really because it's working, but obviously at practice she is still tweaking my swing and stuff, [but] no big adjustments," Normandin said.

When the team ERA is 0.96 and junior pitcher Brandice Balschmiter is throwing no-hitters on a daily basis, it seems there aren't many opportunity for Normandin in centerfield. However, when the ball is hit to deep center, there is a good chance Normandin will make a spectacular catch or throw a player out trying to advance a base.

"I think, 'Thank God she hasn't had to make too many sensational plays for us,' but I can tell you that I have three ESPN [top plays] this year and they all belong to her," Sortino said about Normandin's defense. "She made a diving catch against Michigan State that is the best catch I've seen in my coaching tenure, and I've seen a lot of great catches."

Pitchers tend to overlook hitters in the nine spot. However, Sortino disagrees after Normandin's performance lately. In the Minutewomen's last A-10 matchup against St. Bonaventure, she came to the plate with the team trailing, 1-0. The Bonnies needed one more out to end the Minutewomen's perfect A-10 season, but Normandin hit a double, knocking in two runs for the win. She also tied a UMass record with seven straight hits over a three-game stretch. During that strong week (five games) she batted .571 with 14 RBIs and earned A-10 Player of the Week.

"I don't think teams are overlooking her anymore. The book's out, the word's out," Sortino said. "It's kind of hard to ignore her numbers now."

Steve Games can be reached at sgames a dailycollegian.com.

Sophomore Carly Normandin celebrates with her teammates after hitting one of her six home runs this season.

SPRING SIDEWALK SALE
20%-80% savings
4 Days Only!
Wednesday, May 7-Saturday, May 10
ZANNA
Women's Clothing, Shoes and Accessories
Spring Sidewalk Sale at our Amherst store only

SUMMER SESSION
• Graduate • Undergraduate • Days • Evenings • Weekends • Online •
at Southern.
Summer's the perfect time to take a class at Southern.
Students from other colleges welcome!
Transfer credits to your college or university
Choose from more than 600 classes
Undergraduate and graduate courses
Accelerated courses — one week to five weeks
Study abroad: Paris, Spain, Guatemala, and China
For information and a Summer Session catalog, call or visit our Web site.
Register online at www.SouthernCT.edu
Session A May 27 - June 27
Session B June 30 - August 1
Session C August 4 - August 22
Southern Connecticut State University
New Haven, Connecticut • 203 392 SCSU • 1 888 500 SCSU

$ CASH FOR YOUR CLOTHES $
how does it work?
You bring us your awesome clothes...we sell them... you make money!
(40% to be exact)
it's so easy!
No appointment necessary.
Buy & Sell at the area's BIGGEST & BEST consignment store!..
exclusive Drop & Shop Rewards
Urban Exchange
233 Main Street Northampton MA
413-585-8729

Can you put sudoku on your transcript?

8			7
3			6		5
	9			4
	5	8		9		2	3
	2	3				8	6
	6	1		3		9	5
				5			1
			2		1			6
					4			9

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Summoned, old-style
5 Rough
10 Sleeve cards
14 WWII powers
15 Recipient
16 "Jaws" co-star
17 Lean to one side
18 Moonshine maker
19 Singer Amos
20 Grinding tooth
22 NL Braves
23 Works hard
24 Suffocates
26 Trudeau and Shandling
27 Godhood
28 Ride to the runway
29 Diplomat Hammarskjold
31 Flower drink
33 Cobra's kin
37 Mined mineral
38 Magic home?
40 Battleship letters
41 Sailboat's need
43 Denver pro
44 Mom-and-pop grp.
45 Part of U.A.E.
47 Input, as data
49 Pound a beat
52 Impertinent
55 Die down
56 Blaster's letters
57 Apia's country
58 "Mona Lisa" singer
59 Theme
61 Dawber and Tillis
62 12/24 & 12/31
63 Actor Ryan
64 Jazz singing
65 Remainder
66 Word with club or goat
67 Australian lake

DOWN
1 Ointments
2 Self-evident truth
3 Unseats
4 What we will?
5 LPs, updated
6 Community service group
7 Military groups
8 Computer giant
9 Moray
10 Waldorf
11 Church singers
12 "___ to bed..."
13 Holiest of cheeses?
21 Tanklike animal
23 IRS concern
25 Going on and on
26 Vegetable plots
28 Divergent
29 DiMaggio brother
30 Coach Parseghian
32 Car license plate
34 Quality of kings
35 Hrs. in Seattle
36 987-65-4321 grp.
39 Preminger and Kruger
42 Most tangy
46 "Sheila" singer Tommy
48 Pass, as time
49 Mechanical rabbit, e.g.
50 Over
51 Fireside yarns
52 Chip makers
53 Baseball's Garciaparra
54 One sense
56 Nobel-winner Morrison
59 Rabble
60 Wing it?

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

amherst cinema
Fri, May 9 - Thu, May 15
the Visitor 2:15 4:30 7:15 9:30
PRICELESS No 2:30 Sat or 7:00 Sun
CHOCOLATE COUNTRY
Mon 5/10 2:00 $3 Tickets!
THE LADY VANISHES Sun 5/11 2:00 Thu 5/15 7:00
BEST OF THE FIVE COLLEGE-STUDENT FILMS 2008
Mon 5/11 7:00
THE COUNTERFEITERS 2:45 5:00 7:30 9:45
No 2:45 or 9:45 Sun, No 7:30 Thu
28 Amity St. (413) 253-2547
Downtown Amherst www.amherstcinema.org

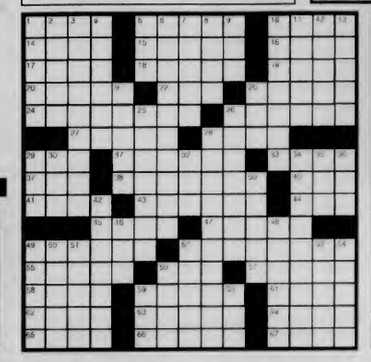
PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Fri, May 9 - Thu, May 15
REDBELT 5:00 7:15 9:30
PLUS 2:45 Sat & Sun AND 10:00am Wed
YOUNG @ HEART 4:45 7:00 9:15
PLUS 2:30 Sat & Sun AND 10:15am Wed
27 Pleasant St. www.pleasantstheater.org
Downtown Northampton (413) 584-5845

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"The human race has only one really effective weapon and that is laughter."

— Samuel Langhorne Clemens

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe



Brothers Watt By Will Wilson

Bliss By Harry Bliss

"Yes, Mr. Walsh. I have you for two nights in our deluxe 'Recently Separated, I'll Be In All Evening Watching Adult Entertainment' suite."

Submit your comics!
comics@dailycollegian.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Tradition is the adversary of ambition.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You can castrate the bull but he'll still be horny.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Never enter into a contract with a cephalopodan sea witch and don't change who you are for some stud with a dog.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
It's official, everyone has lost their mind.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Study hard and hope that information doesn't leak out of your brain like dressing out the back end of a pita.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Childbirth is no more of a miracle than taking a dump. Fertilization, conception, development – now those are miracles.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You're bursting with creative juices, but so are most men your age.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Time flies when you throw your alarm clock out the window instead of getting out of bed.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Money is destroying your integrity. To restore your character, put your life savings in an envelope and mail it to the Collegian.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
It's all fun and games until an army of angry caterpilllars descends from the sky and destroys civilization as we know it.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Smile. Somebody's stalking you.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
When life hands you lemons, cut them open and squirt juice in life's eyes. The only thing sweeter than lemondade is revenge.

Tell me how your day has been?
comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Meeting Notice
Top of Campus, Incorporated (TOC, Inc.) will hold its Annual Meeting in Campus Center 802, Wednesday, May 28, 2008 at 12:00 p.m.

Boltwood Marketplace: open air market for farmers and artists. Opens Saturday May 10th, 9am-1pm. Open every Saturday through July 26th. Looking for vendors. www.boltwoodmarket.com or 253-7879.

APT FOR RENT

Cliffside Apartments. 2 Bedroom apt for sublet/rent beginning June 1st. $915/mo. ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED. Directly on bus route. Contact: rploof@student.umass.edu

6/1. 2 bedroom, free couch, recliner, cables, bedframes. $1100/mo. Contact: gware@student.umass.edu

Center of Town. 2 bedrooms for $1200+ NOW SHOWING for June through September. NO FEES. Schedule a showing

APT FOR RENT

253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Townhouse #32 for rent. Lease starting June 1st. Right near bus stop. Partially furnished. New appliances installed. New kitchen floor, 3 bedroom. 1.5 bathroom. $1500 a month. contact dexter@student.umass.edu

For 9/1/08. Northampton.
2 Bedrooms $825+
3 Bedrooms $1025+
4 Bedrooms $1225+
6 Bedrooms $1500+
584-4920 or 253-7436

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

AMHERST, Mill Valley Estates Limited Time Offer. $1000 Off Your Move-In Costs! 2 bedroom $1175, 3 bedroom $1475, 4 bedroom $2225 includes heat/hot water, air, washer/dryer hookups, dishwasher and 2 full baths. Now Renting for

APT FOR RENT

Summer & Fall 2008! Call now 413-253-7377, email: millvalleyestates@winnco.com

Studio, 1,2,3,4 bedrooms available Going Fast, guaranteeing for fall semester. ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-256-0741

Subletting Puffton for the Summer! Ax about me! 508-335-0seven7seven Pretty cheap.

EMPLOYMENT

Drivers WANTED apply at D.P. Dough downtown Amherst.

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available immediately. Only those able to work the upcoming summer should apply. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call 413-584-4746 or nfo@idealmovers.com

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training

EMPLOYMENT

provided. 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Nonprofit educational organization seeks Resident Director, to begin July 2008. "A Better Chance" (ABC) is a residential program for 8 talented students of color, providing them with the opportunity to attend Amherst Regional High School and live in a structured and supportive environment. The program has an excellent in placing its graduates in top colleges and universities. Exciting opportunity for someone interested in providing leadership and a role model for motivated young men. Bachleor's degree and experience in educaiton desirable. In Lieu of a salary and benefits, the position provides a private apartment and board within our Amherst residence. Applicants with families are encouraged. Send resume and threee letters of reference to : bngham@polisci.umass.edu.

EMPLOYMENT

As part of our expansion program, our company is looking for part time Work from home account managers and sales representatives. It pays $500 a month plus benefits and takes only little of your time. Please contact us for more details. Requirements-should be a computer literate. 2-3 hours access to the internet weekly. Must be over 19yrs of age. Must be efficient and dedicated. If you are interested and need more information, Contact Dan Frank. (dan.frank39@yahoo.com)

FOR SALE

Twin bed (brand new), computer desk & chair, dresser. Each can be sold individually or in a package. Email for more info: dexter@student.umass.edu

GENERAL

INK & TONER CARTRIDGES 30-60% LESS. ECO-FRIENDLY AMHERST 413-548-9905 NORTHAMPTON 413-517-0099

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 Bedroom+ newer home, 2 full baths, laundry hook-ups, large yard, close to UMass Contact (413) 549-4270

28 Stockbridge St. 6 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage. 1.5 mi. to campus! $2850+ www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906. 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test.233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

Fordham, SJU, Charlotte advance

Saint Louis eliminated in 1st day of A-10 Tournament

By Jeff R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

The 2008 Atlantic 10 Softball Tournament started yesterday with two 1-0 pitcher's duels. Fourth-seeded Fordham and fifth-seeded Saint Joseph's played the first of three games, while Game 2 saw No. 3 seed and host school Charlotte square off with No. 6 Saint Louis.

The losers of the day's first two games fought in Game 3 to keep their tournaments alive; like most softball tournaments, the A-10 Tournament is double-elimination. The winner of Game 1 faces top-seeded Massachusetts today, who has won 38 consecutive A-10 games. Game 2's winner will see No. 2 St. Bonaventure in the second game of today's action.

Fordham vs. St. Joe's

Yesterday's first game saw a 1-0 pitcher's duel, with Fordham walking off the field as victors.

Both teams managed to move many of their runners into scoring position, but failed to bring them home. The Hawks had two opportunities with a runner on third and one out but could not capitalize.

Fordham's senior pitcher Allison Twarowski came up big in her complete game shutout, anytime runners were in scoring position. Twarowski and Dani Gonzales of St. Joe's had similar pitching lines. Each gave up four hits and struck out five in their outings.

Gonzales started out the day stronger, not allowing a hit until the third inning and striking out three in the first two innings.

Twarowski was not as dominant in the first half of the game. After shutting down the Hawks' top three in order in the first, Twarowski gave up a hit in each of the next three innings.

She found a groove in the end of the fourth that carried her through the next two innings. The senior struck out the side in the fifth and followed up with another strikeout in the sixth; she retired the next three in order as well.

While Twarowski got in a rhythm, Gonzales showed her first signs of slowing down. After getting the side to ground out in the fourth and the first out of the fifth, the junior gave up her second hit to Jocelyn Dearborn.

With a runner on first, Gonzales induced the next batter, freshman Samantha Pellechio, to hit a ground-ball, but with an error by shortstop Dana Bieniek, the Rams had runners on first and second.

Fordham did what St. Joe's could not do in the previous three innings – drive in runners in scoring position. Next up for the Rams was freshman Meghan Shager, who singled to center-field to drive in Dearborn and put Fordham on top, 1-0.

Gonzales got the next two batters out to end the inning but the damage had been done. The Hawks' would threaten in the top of the seventh but again struggled to drive in runners, stranding the tying run 90 feet away.

Charlotte vs. Saint Louis

Game 2 unfolded much like the first. St. Louis got a strong outing from its starter, sophomore Stacy Gillette (5 2/3 innings, seven strikeouts and one walk), all while giving up one earned run, but the Billikens had no offense to support her.

Freshman Katy Hackett gave up three hits in her seven shutout innings and struck out seven; she also walked two and hit a batter.

St. Louis found itself in the position to drive in runs on many occasions, but failed to do so. For three straight innings, from the second through the fourth, St. Louis had a runner on second with no more than one out, but stranded the runner. The Billikens would not get a hit for the rest of the game.

As for the 49ers, they could not hit anything out of the infield until the fourth inning, when outfielder Serena Smith singled through the left side. The hit did not amount to anything but showed signs of slowing down for Gillette.

In the top of the sixth, it appeared the Billikens would break the 0-0 tie when junior shortstop Rachel Heet led off the inning with a walk. Heet stole second when Hackett struck out sophomore Nicki Jost and followed by stealing third. With one out and a runner on third, first basemen Katie Johns grounded to second base.

Heet was running on the play and Charlotte's second basemen Sarah Malene threw her out at the plate.

After loading the bases off a walk and two singles, Charlotte finally broke the tie off a single from Smith, her second hit of the game, driving in junior Jenny Rumbles from third.

Hackett sat down the side in order in the top of the seventh, sealing the 49ers victory, and sending them face St. Bonaventure today.

SLU vs. St. Joe's

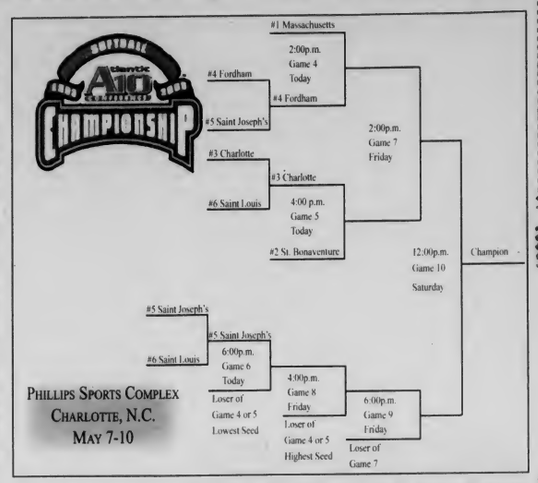
With their tournament lives on the line, St. Louis and St. Joe's hoped to get some offense going after being shutout and struggling to drive in runners.

St. Louis was playing shortly after its loss to Charlotte, and quickly did what they could not in its previous game.

After freshman Kristen Nicoletti reached first on an error by the Billikens' third basemen Sue Lebow, Nicoletti stole second and then advanced to third on a ground out to third base. St. Louis got its first run of the day when Heet hit a sacrifice fly to left field.

The Hawks responded in the bottom of the inning on a sacrifice fly to left, driving in freshman Laura Cordone to knot the game at one. The Hawks scored another in the third off a RBI double by Rosenwinkel.

In the fourth, the Billikens twice had runners thrown out at the plate, to record the last two outs of the inning leaving the bases loaded.



St. Joe's would go on to score two more off a two-run home run by Rosenwinkel in the fifth. The junior outfielder finished the day 2-of-3 with a home run, a double and three RBIs.

The Hawks won, 4-1, eliminating SLU from the tournament. They will play the third game today against the lowest-seeded loser of tomorrow's first two games.

Jeff R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu

Freshman pitcher Katy Hackett allowed three hits over seven shutout innings in Charlotte's 1-0 win over Saint Louis yesterday.

A-10 Softball

Normandin becoming force

NORMANDIN from page 14

batting order. With Normandin struggling, Sortino moved her to the ninth spot.

"Even if you look at the way she started, she wasn't consistent because she didn't trust herself and didn't have the playing experience of a young thoroughbred," Sortino said.

"[Coach Sortino] knew that I could do it, and she just wanted me to believe in my athleticism and let my natural talent take over and to not think about it," Normandin said.

Normandin thrived in the ninth spot and after playing on the road for the first half of the season, UMass started playing home games and A-10 opponents. She exploded in A-10 play, batting .436. She felt the move in the batting order helped because there is less pressure in the ninth spot. She feels that she is gaining an advantage by seeing the pitchers approach against the first eight batters.

"It was our hope that Carly would break out this year because what she needed was the time and the opportunity," Sortino said.

Normandin hasn't got much advice lately from Sortino, as the team is about to play in the A-10 Tournament in North Carolina today.

"Usually when people are hitting well, she tends not to say anything really because it's working, but obviously at practice she is still tweaking my swing and stuff, [but] no big adjustments," Normandin said.

When the team ERA is 0.96 and junior pitcher Brandice Balschmiter is throwing no-hitters on a daily basis, it seems there aren't many opportunity for Normandin in centerfield. However, when the ball is hit to deep center, there is a good chance Normandin will make a spectacular catch or throw a player out trying to advance a base.

"I think, 'Thank God she hasn't had to make too many sensational plays for us,' but I can tell you that I have three ESPN [top plays] this year and they all belong to her," Sortino said about Normandin's defense. "She made a diving catch against Michigan State that is the best catch I've seen in my coaching tenure, and I've seen a lot of great catches."

Pitchers tend to overlook hitters in the nine spot. However, Sortino disagrees after Normandin's performance lately. In the Minutewomen's last A-10 matchup against St. Bonaventure, she came to the plate with the team trailing, 1-0. The Bonnies needed one more out to end the Minutewomen's perfect A-10 season, but Normandin hit a double, knocking in two runs for the win. She also tied a UMass record with seven straight hits over a three-game stretch. During that strong week (five games) she batted .571 with 14 RBIs and earned A-10 Player of the Week.

"I don't think teams are overlooking her anymore. The book's out, the word's out," Sortino said. "It's kind of hard to ignore her numbers now."

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@dailycollegian.com.

Sophomore Carly Normandin celebrates with her teammates after hitting one of her six home runs this season.

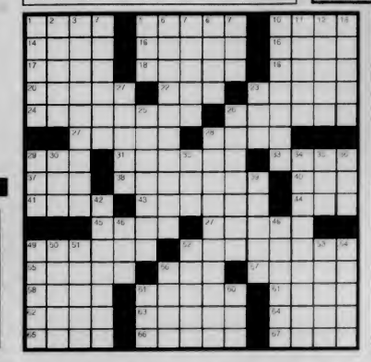
SPRING SIDEWALK SALE
20%-80% savings
4 Days Only!
Wednesday, May 7-Saturday, May 10
ZANNA
Women's Clothing, Shoes and Accessories
Spring Sidewalk Sale at our Amherst store only.

SUMMER SESSION
• Graduate • Undergraduate • Days • Evenings • Weekends • Online •
at Southern.
Summer's the perfect time to take a class at Southern.
Students from other colleges welcome!
Transfer credits to your college or university
Choose from more than 600 classes
Undergraduate and graduate courses
Accelerated courses — one week to five weeks
Study abroad: Paris, Spain, Guatemala, and China
For information and a Summer Session catalog, call or visit our Web site.
Register online at www.SouthernCT.edu
Session A May 27 - June 27
Session B June 30 - August 1
Session C August 4 - August 22
Southern Connecticut State University
New Haven, Connecticut • 203 392 SCSU • 1 888 500 SCSU

$ CASH FOR YOUR CLOTHES $
how does it work?
You bring us your awesome clothes...we sell them... you make money!
(40% to be exact)
it's so easy!
No appointment necessary.
Buy & Sell at the area's BIGGEST & BEST consignment store!...
exclusive Drop & Shop Rewards
Urban Exchange
233 Main Street Northampton MA
413-585-8729

Can you put sudoku on your transcript?

8			7
3			6		5
	9			4
	5	8		9		2	3
	2	3				8	6
	6	1		3		9	5
				5			1
			2		1			6
					4			9



Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Summoned, old-style
5 Rough
10 Sleeve cards
14 WWII powers
15 Recipient
16 "Jaws" co-star
17 Lean to one side
18 Moonshine maker
19 Singer Amos
20 Grinding tooth
22 NL Braves
23 Works hard
24 Suffocates
26 Trudeau and Shandling
27 Godhood
28 Ride to the runway
29 Diplomat Hammarskjold
31 Flower drink
33 Cobra's kin
37 Mined mineral
38 Magic home?
40 Battleship letters
41 Sailboat's need
43 Denver pro
44 Mom-and-pop grp.
45 Part of U.A.E.
47 Input, as data
49 Pound a beat
52 Impertinent
55 Die down
56 Blaster's letters
57 Apia's country
58 "Mona Lisa" singer
59 Theme
61 Dawber and Tillis
62 12/24 & 12/31
63 Actor Ryan
64 Jazz singing
65 Remainder
66 Word with club or goat
67 Australian lake

DOWN
1 Ointments
2 Self-evident truth
3 Unseats
4 What we will
5 LPs, updated
6 Community service group
7 Military groups
8 Computer giant
9 Moray
10 Waldorf
11 Church singers
12 "___ lo bed..."
13 Holes in cheeses?
21 Tarantula-like animal
23 IRS concern
25 Going on and on
26 Vegetable plots
28 Divergent
29 DiMaggio brother
30 Coach Parseghian
32 Car license plate
34 Quality of kings
35 Hrs. in Seattle
36 987-65 4321 grp.
39 Preminger and Kruger
42 Most hangry
46 "Sheila" singer Tommy
48 Pass, as time
49 Mechanical rabbit, e.g.
50 Over
51 Fireside yarns
52 Chip makers
53 Baseball's Garciaparra
54 One sense
58 Nobel winner Morrison
59 Rabble
60 Wing it?

amherst cinema
Fri, May 9 - Thu, May 15
the Visitor 2:15 4:30 7:15 9:30
PRICELESS No 2:30 Sat or 7:00 Sun
CHOCOLATE COUNTRY
Mon 5/10 2:00 $3 Tickets!
THE LADY VANISHES Sun 5/11 2:00 Thu 5/15 7:00
BEST OF THE FIVE COLLEGE STUDENT FILMS 2008
Mon 5/11 7:00
THE COUNTERFEITERS 2:45 5:00 7:30 9:45
No 2:45 or 9:45 Sun, No 7:30 Thu
28 Amity St. (413) 253-2547
Downtown Amherst www.amherstcinema.org
PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Fri, May 9 - Thu, May 15
REDBELT 5:00 7:15 9:30 PLUS 2:45 Sat & Sun AND 10:00am Wed
YOUNG @ HEART 4:45 7:00 9:15 PLUS 2:30 Sat & Sun AND 10:15am Wed
27 Pleasant St. www.pleasantstheater.org
Downtown Northampton (413) 584-5846

Submit your comics!
comics@dailycollegian.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"The human race has only one really effective weapon and that is laughter."

— Samuel Langhorne Clemens

PAUL By Billy O'Keefe

BROTHERS WATT By Will Wilson

BLISS By Harry Bliss

"Yes, Mr. Walsh. I have you for two nights in our deluxe 'Recently Separated, I'll Be In All Evening Watching Adult Entertainment' suite."

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Tradition is the adversary of ambition.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You can castrate the bull but he'll still be horny.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Never enter into a contract with a cephalopodan sea witch and don't change who you are for some stud with a dog.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
It's official, everyone has lost their mind.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Study hard and hope that information doesn't leak out of your brain like dressing out the back end of a pita.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Childbirth is no more of a miracle than taking a dump. Fertilization, conception, development – now those are miracles.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You're bursting with creative juices, but so are most men your age.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Time flies when you throw your alarm clock out the window instead of getting out of bed.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Money is destroying your integrity. To restore your character, put your life savings in an envelope and mail it to the Collegian.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
It's all fun and games until an army of angry caterpillars descends from the sky and destroys civilization as we know it.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Smile. Somebody's stalking you.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
When life hands you lemons, cut them open and squirt juice in life's eyes. The only thing sweeter than lemondade is revenge.

Tell me how your day has been?

comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Meeting Notice
Top of Campus, Incorporated (TOC, Inc.) will hold its Annual Meeting in Campus Center 802, Wednesday, May 28, 2008 at 12:00 p.m.

Boltwood Marketplace: open air market for farmers and artists. Opens Saturday May 10th, 9am-1pm. Open every Saturday through July 26th. Looking for vendors. www.boltwoodmarket.com or 253-7879.

APT FOR RENT

Cliffside Apartments. 2 Bedroom apt for sublet/rent beginning June 1st. $915/mo. ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED. Directly on bus route. Contact: rploof@student.umass.edu

6/1, 2 bedroom, free couch, recliner, cables, bedframes. $1100/mo. Contact: gware@student.umass.edu

Center of Town, 2 bedrooms for $1200+ NOW SHOWING for June through September. NO FEES. Schedule a showing

APT FOR RENT

253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Townhouse #32 for rent. Lease starting June 1st. Right near bus stop. Partially furnished. New appliances installed. New kitchen floor, 3 bedroom, 1.5 bathroom. $1500 a month. contact dexter@student.umass.edu

For 9/1/08. Northampton. 2 Bedrooms $825+ 3 Bedrooms $1025+ 4 Bedrooms $1225+ 6 Bedrooms $1500+ 584-4920 or 253-7436

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

AMHERST, Mill Valley Estates Limited Time Offer, $1000 Off Your Move-In Costs! 2 bedroom $1175, 3 bedroom $1475, 4 bedroom $2225 includes heat/hot water, air, washer/dryer hookups, dishwasher and 2 full baths. Now Renting for

APT FOR RENT

Summer & Fall 2008! Call now 413-253-7377, email: millvalleyestates@winnco.com

Studio, 1,2,3,4 bedrooms available Going Fast, guaranteeing for fall semester. ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-256-0741

Subletting Puffton for the Summer! Ax about me! 508-335-0seven/seven Pretty cheap.

EMPLOYMENT

Drivers WANTED apply at D.P. Dough downtown Amherst.

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available immediately. Only those able to work the upcoming summer should apply. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call 413-584-4746 or nfo@idealmovers.com

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training

EMPLOYMENT

provided. 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Nonprofit educational organization seeks Resident Director, to begin July 2008. "A Better Chance" (ABC) is a residential program for 8 talented students of color, providing them with the opportunity to attend Amherst Regional High School and live in a structured and supportive environment. The program has an excellent in placing its graduates in top colleges and universities. Exciting opportunity for someone interested in providing leadership and a role model for motivated young men. Bachleor's degree and experience in education desirable. In Lieu of a salary and benefits, the position provides a private apartment and board within our Amherst residence. Applicants with families are encouraged. Send resume and threee letters of reference to : bngham@polisci.umass.edu.

EMPLOYMENT

As part of our expansion program, our company is looking for part time Work from home account managers and sales representatives, it pays $500 a month plus benefits and takes only little of your time. Please contact us for more details Requirements-should be a computer literate. 2-3 hours access to the internet weekly. Must be over 19yrs of age. Must be efficient and dedicated. If you are interested and need more information, Contact Dan Frank. (dan.frank39@yahoo.com)

FOR SALE

Twin bed (brand new), computer desk & chair, dresser. Each can be sold individually or in a package. Email for more info: dexter@student.umass.edu

GENERAL

INK & TONER CARTRIDGES 30-60% LESS. ECO-FRIENDLY AMHERST 413-548-9905 NORTHAMPTON 413-517-0099

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 Bedroom+ newer home, 2 full baths, laundry hook-ups, large yard, close to UMass Contact (413) 549-4270

28 Stockbridge St. 6 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage. 1.5 mi. to campus! $2850+ www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, MAY 8, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Normandin shines after replacing star

Sophomore curbs damage after graduation of Molinari

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Before the season began, sophomore centerfielder Carly Normandin wasn't sure if she would even start. Now, with the regular season complete, she is one of the best young outfielders in the Atlantic 10.

During her freshman season, she played sparingly as she started in nine games playing behind senior Candice Molinari, who had a career year, hitting .401. With Molinari graduating, the centerfield position opened up.

Normandin knew UMass coach Elaine Sortino wouldn't hand her the starting position. She went into practice every day thinking it could be anyone, so she had to push herself.

"There was a lot of competition for who was going to start in centerfield," Normandin said. "You just have to go out there everyday at practice not knowing who's going to play. So you just have to go out and work very hard."

Sortino feels Normandin is one of the best athletes on the team, but coming out of high school she still needed work before she could play everyday.

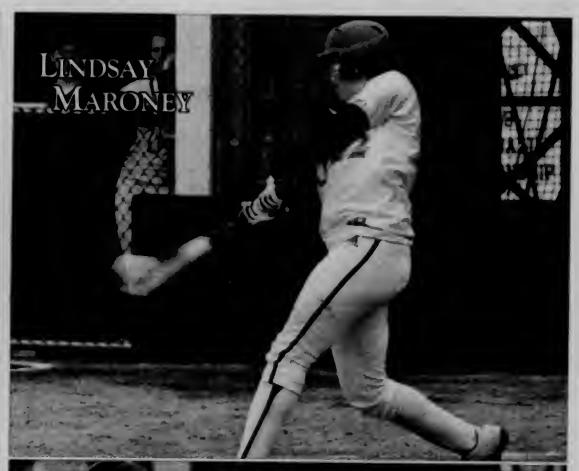
"She was very raw and had athletic talent that needed to feel and learn the game," Sortino said.

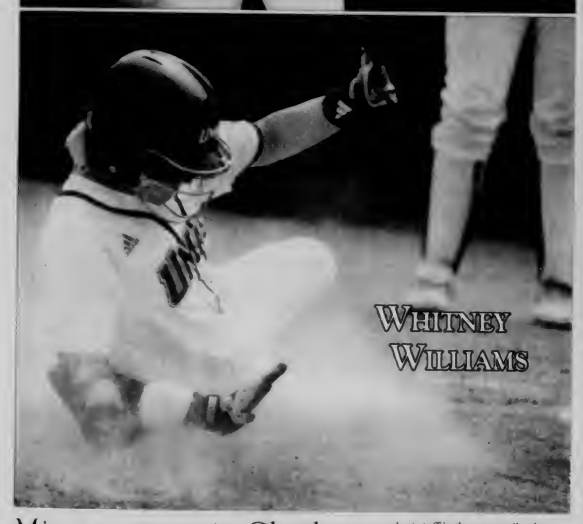
When her skill caught up to her athleticism, Normandin was named to the A-10 All Conference First Team. She hit .336 with six home runs and a team high 36 RBIs. Pretty good for someone hitting in the nine spot on a deep UMass team.

"She's [become] a formable hitter because she's finally trusting her athleticism," Sortino said.

It wasn't all coming together in the early part of the season when UMass traveled on the road to play some of the top teams in the nation, which included, among many others, Arizona, Texas A&M and UCLA. At the beginning of the season, Normandin split time with junior outfielder Davina Hernandez and Sortino had her second in the

See NORMANDIN on page 12





BRIAN THEURER/COLLEGIAN

Centerfielder Carly Normandin earned the starting position this season after senior Candice Molinari graduated last year. She leads the Minutewomen with 36 RBIs this season.

UMass begins quest for No. 20

Minutewomen in Charlotte for Atlantic 10 Tournament

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's been a few weeks since an Atlantic 10 matchup meant anything for the No. 20 Massachusetts softball team, which clinched its playoff spot with plenty of games remaining on the schedule, but today's game against fourth-seeded Fordham represents the first big game for the Minutewomen in nearly a month.

Fordham (1-0) defeated Saint Joseph's, 1-0, yesterday in Game 1 of the Atlantic 10 Tournament, riding a complete game shutout by Allison Twarowski (four hits, five strikeouts, no walks).

Twarowski outdueled Hawks pitcher Dani Gonzales, who ranked sixth and third, respectively, in the conference in earned-run average this season, but the Rams' ace will meet a greater challenge today in reigning three-time A-10 Pitcher of the Year, Brandice Balschmiter, who sports the nation's best ERA at 0.53.

The two teams have not met since the first weekend of A-10 play. UMass swept the series, as it did the rest of its conference slate, 4-2 and 1-0 on March 20. Twarowski pitched 6 1/3 innings in Game 1, giving up four runs, three earned, on 10 hits and four walks. She also had three strikeouts.

Balschmiter did not have her best stuff in that game, allowing two earned runs on four hits and a walk while striking out six.

Fordham utilizes two other pitchers, sophomore Nicole Ayers (10-8, 4.37 ERA) and freshman Beckah Wiggins (12-11, 3.21). Ayers actually saw the most playing time, leading her team with 24 starts and 40 appearances overall, but it is Twarowski that has become the team's workhorse down the stretch.

For the Minutewomen, the biggest question will be how UMass coach Elaine Sortino utilizes sophomore hurler Bailey Sanders. Over the last two seasons, Balschmiter has started every postseason game for her team, registering a 12-4 record.

Sortino, however, has stressed all year that she likes the contrast in pitching styles between Balschmiter's powerful fastball and Sanders' rise-ball and drop-ball, and will likely not hesitate to use in Sanders in key spots.

"Obviously, Brandice is going to be the horse that we put out there first," Sortino said. "She's done very, very well against this particular field of opponents, and we have the luxury of having Bailey if we need to change it up. That's the way I'm approaching it."

The pair have split starts over the course of the season (Balschmiter has started 29, Sanders 18), but Sanders will be moving primarily to a relief role to being the postseason.

"It's going to be one game at a time," Sortino said. "I'll be looking at a lot of tape and making a lot of decisions about pitch calls and what we need to deliver."

Although they haven't had a statistically meaningful game for some time, the Minutewomen faced possibly their biggest challenge since conference play began back in March during the final game of the regular season.

St. Bonaventure, who finished second in the A-10 and earned the other first-round bye in the tournament, held a 1-0 lead on UMass last Sunday until the top of the seventh inning, when No. 9 hitter Carly Normandin hit a two-run double that preserved the Minutewomen's perfect conference record.

"That was a very meaningful game for us," Sortino said. "We've had it kind of easy. We've been well ahead. We haven't been really challenged."

The Bonnies' Sherri Thompson challenged the UMass bats, shutting out the Maroon and White until the final inning, despite giving up nine hits.

"I thought it was great for us to be able to go down to the wire and come from behind," Sortino said. "Falling behind to St. Bonaventure, with the great crowd watching the game and a lot of pressure on us, to finish strong, I thought that was a real good test for us."

The Minutewomen are still missing their best offensive player from a year ago – second baseman Stacy Cullington, who has been out with a broken thumb since the beginning of April. Her cast was removed April 29, and initial opinions by doctors and coaches, which indicated she would not return until the NCAA opening round (beginning next weekend), have not changed.

"It's day to day right now," Sortino said. "She will not be able to make a plate appearance for us this weekend. We're trying to make her stronger and see what she can do."

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

"There's no place like Home"
At
THE BOULDERS APARTMENTS

- ✓ FREE HEAT
- ✓ FREE HOT WATER
- ✓ FREE PARKING
- ✓ FITNESS CENTER
- ✓ A/C READY
- ✓ 6 LAUNDRY FACILITIES
- ✓ ON PVTA BUS ROUTE
- ✓ ON-CALL MAINTENANCE
- ✓ ON-SITE MANAGEMENT
- ✓ IMMENSE CLOSET SPACE

RESERVE YOUR SPOT ON OUR FALL WAITING LIST BEFORE IT'S TOO LATE!!!!

2 Bedroom Apartments
$1010.00/month for 12 month lease

LOOK & LEASE SPECIAL:
Come in, tour our community, put down a $100.00 refundable holding deposit within 48 hours, and we'll take $500.00 off your second months rent!!

Call: (413) 256-8534
Email: thebolders@northland.com

COLLEGIAN
WEEKEND EDITION

FRI H:58 | SAT H:65 | SUN H:72 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, MAY 9, 2008

Sexing up the lawn

UMass student Doug Johnson (right) draws and decorates a picture of male genitalia at VOX's annual "Sex on the Lawn" event yesterday.

BY STEPHANIE MCPHERSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The library lawn was littered with booths and students for VOX: Students for Choice's third annual "Sex on the Lawn" event yesterday.

VOX joined forces with many other registered student organizations (RSOs) and clubs to present a day filled with sex and health education.

Students milled about the tables that ranged from Planned Parenthood to HIV awareness to a sexual bake sale complete with anatomically correct, decorate-it-yourself cookies.

See SEX ON THE LAWN on page 9

INSIDE:

NEWS
Learn about some local fests
—
Page 2

FEATURES
Cleaning things up: DC worker tells his tough tale
—
Page 4

SPORTS
UMass baseball tries to keep playoff hopes alive
—
Page 13

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 137

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Mike Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COMICS EDITOR Adam Szajgin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALMA LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
S.P. Sullivan

COPY EDITOR
Domenic Poli

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

WEB EDITOR
Lief Walcutt

HerbFest spices up UMass

BY EMILY REYNOLDS
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

HerbFest 2008 took place in the Student Union Ballroom yesterday, showing off projects that students from the "Herbs, Spices, and Medicinal Plants" class have worked on.

"HerbFest is a project that the students work on through the semester," said professor Lyle Craker, who has been running the class for nearly 20 years. "We like to demonstrate the uses of herbs and spices."

The project started in the morning with about 200 students from schools in the surrounding area and was later opened to the public for a few hours.

"It gives them a chance to show what they have been learning," said Craker.

Students filled the ballroom with projects, showing off all sorts of uses for herbs and spices, including those as common as caffeine, soaps, and teas, as well as those not so common, like herbs that double as aphrodisiacs.

One herb that is common but not well known is stevia, which comes from Paraguay. It flavors food and doubles as a weight loss tool.

"The Food and Drug Administration regulates it as a dietary supplement instead of a food additive," said Elizabeth Saunders, who did her project on the herb.

Stevia can be used in place of sugar in many dishes. It can help diabetics by controlling blood sugar levels and helps people with autoimmune diseases.

"It comes in a lot of forms, and it is really easy to bake with," said Saunders.

Saunders demonstrated the use of stevia in bread and cookies she had made. Also included on her table were nearly a dozen cookbooks that contained stevia in the recipes, showing the versatility of the little-known plant.

Like Saunders, many projects had something for the viewers to enjoy. Among the projects, there were samples of chocolate, tea, soda, and various baked goods with herbs and spices in them.

Hampshire student Claudia Coleman, like Saunders, did her project on something a little less known to the general public.

"A tincture is the extraction of the medicinal part of the plant through an alcohol process," said Coleman.

Coleman had several samples she had grown, prepared, and put in a jar for display. Along with the plants, she also had a large book she put together during an independent study last semester – which made her project six months in the making.

One of the better-known projects was caffeine, which was what sophomore Alyson Villard did her project on.

"Since I absolutely love caffeine, why not do a project on it?" said Villard.

Villard's presentation came not only with samples of soft drinks for the visitor, but with the molecular structure, showing what exactly made the caffeine so addictive, a compound in the molecule that is found in many other addictive things.

Though caffeine itself is not an herb or spice, Villard showed how relevant it was.

"It is a derivative from 60 different plants in the world," said Villard.

While many people will never know much about any particular herb or spice that is not used regularly cooking, these projects done by the students in Craker's class showed how prevalent they are in everyday life. That was not Craker's only objective, however.

"One of the things about herbs is that there are many small businesses can come out of them," said Craker.

Emily Reynolds can be reached at ereynold@student.umass.edu.

SoccerFest scores again in Amherst

BY ERIK TABER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Clif Bar's 2008 SoccerFest is back again – a one-day, six-on-six soccer tournament hosted each year at the University of Massachusetts to be held on Saturday, May 10.

There is competitive and recreational pool play for male, female and co-ed teams from around New England. Each team is guaranteed three 25-minute games, plus up to three rounds of playoff games. Prizes will be awarded to the winning teams.

There are a record number of 134 teams registered for SoccerFest this year, which is a 33 percent increase from last year.

SoccerFest will also feature two exhibition games played by both the 2007 NCAA Final Four UMass Men's soccer team, and women's varsity team. The Clif Kid Fun Zone will be back this year featuring inflatable rides, a dunk tank, a rock wall and craft center for kids. Live music and food will also be provided.

As a last-minute addition, they will have live band Maxstone performing during the day. They have opened for artists Switchfoot, Howie Day, Mandy Moore, Motley Crue, Eve 6, Tiffany and 98 Degrees.

SoccerFest is a non-profit tournament supported solely by partners and participant registration fees. Tournament proceeds go toward the Erik Kjeldsen Scholarship Fund, named after former UMass sport management professor Dr. Erik Kjeldsen. Each year the sport management department awards scholarships to two of its students that exemplify academic excellence and superior work ethic.

"The SoccerFest marketing team is eagerly anticipating this year's event and all the activities we are going to be offering," said UMass student Samantha Lewis.

"Along with the inflatables everyone loves, we have many exciting activities available in the Clif Kid Fun Zone, including, but not limited to, a dunk tank, FANtasy Fenway Park, a rock wall, new carnival game activities and live music. However, most of all we are looking forward to seeing all the smiling faces of our participants, spectators and parents."

This year's UMass men's and women's varsity soccer teams will play a doubleheader on Saturday with the men's team playing at 1 p.m. and the women's team following.

The men's team will face the Western Mass Pioneers in a game featuring a special ceremony honoring the 75th anniversary of the soccer program at the University. The women's team will take the field against the Adirondack Lynx, a member of the Women's Premier Soccer league, with special Mother's Day festivities featured during the game.

This year marks the third straight year that SoccerFest will work with the Amherst Youth Soccer Association (AYSA). All AYSA players will participate in Clif Bar SoccerFest 2008, making it the largest spring soccer tournament for the entire community.

"SoccerFest gives Amherst Youth Soccer an opportunity to be a part of an incredible day of soccer," said director of coaching for AYSA Christopher Streeter. "More importantly than that, it's a community event that uses soccer as its platform, encompassing music, games, food, soccer clinics, a FunZone, and prizes. The UMass sport management students are professional, competent, attentive, and committed to making the event bigger and better than the year before, which is very difficult to do."

According to Dr. Mark McDonald, the faculty advisor for the class, the graduate and undergraduate students are responsible for all aspects of the event's managing and marketing. He said students gain the experience of running their own small company as the class requires students to set event goals and objectives, budget for the event, develop and execute a marketing plan, sell sponsorships, and recruit and train 180 volunteers.

He added that students grow personally and professionally from the experience of interacting with each other and the various stakeholders, such as the AYSA, corporate sponsors, community members and organizations, and members of the UMass staff, faculty and administration.

"Working with these constituencies provides students with a realistic preview of the challenges inherent in running sport events that require the commitment of an entire community to be successful," McDonald said.

"There is always a challenge of trying to improve the event each year," said UMass student Alex Hughes. "Last year's event set a pretty high bar, but we really think that we are really going to surprise a lot of people this year, especially those who have been participating since the first year."

"This event really showcases what UMass-Amherst is all about" said Matt Weinberger, one of the organizers of SoccerFest. "It is a great reflection not only on SOM and the sport management program, but the entire campus."

More information about the event can be found at www.soccerfest.org.

Erik Taber can be reached at etaber@student.umass.edu.

NOW OFFERING Cash for Books Prepaid MasterCard®!

CASH FOR BOOKS

We're buying your books back at these convenient locations:

Textbook Annex
Monday - Wednesday, May 12 - 14
9am – 4pm
Thursday – Friday, May 15 – 16
9am – 5pm
Saturday, May 17
11am – 4pm
Monday - Wednesday, May 19 - 21
9am – 5pm
Thursday, May 22
9am – 4pm

Campus Center- Concourse
Monday - Wednesday, May 12 - 14
9am – 4pm
Thursday – Friday, May 15 – 16
9am – 5pm
Saturday, May 17
11am – 4pm
Monday - Wednesday, May 19 - 21
9am – 5pm
Thursday, May 22
9am – 2pm

Southwest- Hampden Lobby
Thursday – Friday, May 15 - 16
10am – 5pm
Monday - Wednesday, May 19 - 21
10am – 5pm
Thursday, May 22
10am – 1pm

UMASS AMHERST University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413-545-2619

efollett.com ONLINE. ON CAMPUS.

790

STUDENT RELAXES FOR ELEVEN STRAIGHT MINUTES!
NAMEintheNEWS.COM

FEATURES

Death, deliverance and Dining Services

By Jeromie Whalen
Collegian Staff

When walking through the mass of students moving hastily through Franklin Dining Common to get a quick bite to eat, it becomes easy to ignore certain things. Forgetting to pick up a dropped fork, leaving a tray abandoned on a cafeteria table or ignoring a drink accidentally spilled becomes commonplace in the mid-morning rush to class. Even skipping out on a simple thank-you to a helpful worker is easy to do. A worker, for instance, like Russell Daniels.

Considered a "problem child" by his parents, Daniels was admitted in 1958 to the Belchertown State Schools mental hospital: a place he would call home for the next 13 years of his life.

"My family just dropped me off, said goodbye and left," said Daniels. "I didn't have any visitors for quite a while."

Established in 1922, the State Schools was one of many state-run facilities which intended to nurture and develop individuals with mental disabilities.

Although it was built to accommodate 1,000 people, by 1967 the State Schools housed more than 1,650 residents, some of whom were institutionalized due to their "difference" from the social norm.

Inexperienced staff members, at times outnumbered 30 to 1, were responsible for the impossible task of bathing, shaving, dressing, medicating, and performing other daily routines for every individual, in addition to cleaning and maintaining a log book of events. As a result, negligence and punishment became common tools for control.

"Instead of showering, the staff hosed down the kids with hoses," Daniels said. "They treated the residents terrible."

In other instances, residents were confined in a small room known as the "Dog House" for days at a time. According to Daniels, all they provided was a pillow, a blanket and a mattress. "If you got out of hand they'd take away the mattress and let you sleep on the floor," he said.

Volunteering his services to the institution, Daniels worked tediously in the kitchen preparing meals for residents, an experience he would later draw from when becoming an employee for the University of Massachusetts' Dining Services.

Daniels left Belchertown in 1971 and took up residence in Springfield as part of a new transitional program being implemented. "It felt real good to get out of there," he said. "Although I never should have been there in the first place."

A year after taking up residence in Springfield, Daniels began work at a local fast food restaurant as well as picking up odd jobs on the side.

In 1972, however, Daniels found himself again in conflict with the institution; only this time of a different nature. On August 22, Daniels was arrested on charges of fatally stabbing Klara Hass, an elderly resident of the apartment complex where he had been living for a year.

After an exhaustive seven-hour interrogation in which he was refused the right to speak to family or even a lawyer, Daniel's was released on bail.

"[The police] didn't treat me as a human being, that's for sure," he said. "It was pretty scary."

No fingerprints, witnesses, or other evidence connected him to the crime. However, on February 23, 1973, after several months of court deliberations, Daniels was found guilty of murder. "They needed somebody to blame, and it just happened to be me," he said.

As Daniel's prepared to be transported for permanent confinement in Walpole Prison, support for his innocence began to emerge.

Following Daniels' case was Benjamin Ricci, a science professor at the UMass who fought for better treatment and funding in the Belchertown State Schools after admitting his son in 1953 and observing its deteriorating condition.

Through the communal efforts of Ricci and students who believed in Daniels' innocence, supporters demanded that Massachusetts Gov. Francis Sargent meet with them on the matter.

Though reluctant at first, the governor eventually began to bow to political pressure. In 1974, Sargent appointed a citizen's commission to investigate Daniels' case. Sitting trapped behind prison bars, Daniels waited nervously while Ricci and other prepared for an appeal.

On January 7, 1975, almost two years after being convicted, Daniels' case was overturned by the Massachusetts Supreme Court. Though relieved to be free, Daniels thought that a lot of people didn't think he should've been out in the community.

As a result, Daniels was readmitted to the States Schools, where he remained until its closing in 1992.

Thirty-five years have gone by since Daniels had first heard the hallow thud of the gavel that sentenced him to life in prison. And although many would harbor hatred for being put into such a situation, Daniels maintains a sense of quiet tolerance. "Things like this happen sometimes to people who can't fight back," he said. "I just want to make sure it doesn't happen to anyone else."

Daniels now uses his experience as positive tool for educating others. He is currently a board member for the Open Door Club, a self-advocacy organization which promotes opportunities for development of social and living skills for people with disabilities.

Daniels is also a proud employee at UMass. In addition to work, he is currently enrolled in the University's Labor/Management Workplace Education Program. "I love working for UMass," Daniels said, reflecting on his nine years of service to the University. "I have respect for the staff and students and they have respect for me."

So next time, while scrambling to collect yourself for your next class, be sure to thank Russell Daniels for his services. For the man who has fought and won in the battle for freedom throughout his entire life, it would be much appreciated.

Jeromie Whalen can be reached at jjwhalen@student.umass.edu

JEROMIE WHALEN/COLLEGIAN

During the day, Russell Daniels works at the Franklin Dining Commons while at night he uses his life experience to guide and educate others.

Digging wells before graduation

By Katherine Neubert
Collegian Staff

What do engineering, well water and spending spring break in Kenya have in common? If you're not sure, just ask University of Massachusetts graduating senior Julie Gagen and she will tell you.

President of Engineers Without Borders (EWB), Gagen is graduating May 24. Four days later, she will head to Kenya for six weeks. Gagen is a civil and environmental engineering major and this will be her third and longest trip since she's been at UMass.

Gagen and four peers, accompanied by one professional advisor, have been traveling to the village of Namawanga, Kenya, working on a water project to help 3,000 people. Their first trip was during spring break of 2006 and their second in January 2007.

In Kenya, Gagen and her peers work to create a treatment for hazardous waste sites and conduct investigations for cleaning dirty soil and water. After taking a water sample and figuring out what is wrong with the sample, the students develop solutions to help the people of the village.

"One of the problems we were having in the village was that a bunch of cows would stand in and around the water that was supposed to be used for drinking," said Gagen. "Our first solution was to create a fence and a gate around the water so the cows couldn't get to it anymore. The second solution was to put a mound of dirt on top of the water so that nothing could get to it from above, and the third solution was to create a drainage system for it."

These solutions are then taught to experts in the village so they can continue identifying and eliminating problems after Gagen and her group leave.

One of the major problems in working in these villages is the economic situation. "It costs $20,000 to drill a well in Kenya, and people in that village only make $400 a year on salary," she said.

Besides combating the costs of protecting water, EWB also puts together educational materials the people of the village can use as a resource library.

"We are different than NGOs [non-governmental organizations] who come drill, leave and come back 10 years later to a disaster," added Gagen. "We are partly engineering, but more about community interacting. We help the community and the quality of life."

Fundraising is the only thing that pays for EWB's trips to Kenya and elsewhere. Without the fundraising, students would have to pay out of their pocket. Yesterday's "Skip-A-Meal" at the dining Commons donated a percentage to this specific cause. Another big donator is Rotary International, who pays for drilling costs in the village. This summer's trip to Kenya alone will cost about $40,000, according to Gagen's estimates.

Once they arrive in Kenya, the group is picked up by a local guide and they stay overnight at a hotel in Nairobi. "We always have a translator just in case, even though they are taught English in school," Gagen said.

The second day, the group is driven to Namawanga, where they again stay in a hotel. Two meals a day are included at the hotel, while they eat one in the village. Gagen and her group reimburse the people of the village at the end of their trip for the cost of food.

During her spare time, Gagen goes to high schools in the area to educate them about engineering and her experiences with EWB. "I'm so impressed with those kids involved in EWB in high school," she said.

After Gagen's Kenya trip, she will begin working for Camp, Dresser and McKee, Inc., in Cambridge, who has a partnership with EWB nationally, while she continues to get her professional license, which will take about five years.

Camp, Dresser and McKee teach theory and design, while subjecting employees to a lot of fieldwork.

"I'll be out there in a hard hat and boots taking water samples with biologists and chemists," Gagen said.

She first became interested in the field of engineering after a science teacher at Rangeley Lakes Regional School, where she graduated with 12 other people, thought she might like it and helped her get involved in activities.

"I knew I could do it," said Gagen. "Not a lot of women do it and I thought, 'What the heck?'"

Villagers and engineers work together to supply the village of Namawanga with fresh and clean water.

Playing 'PR' games

By Frank Vitale
Collegian Staff

Roughly 50 people settled down as four sharply-dressed young people approached the podium and, with the reporters, pens in hand, leaning forward in their seats and then Anthony Rouzier kicked off the press conference with the words Las Vegas had been waiting to hear: "We're proud to introduce the Las Vegas Shooters as the latest NBA Expansion team."

The group then went right to work and detailed their plans for the Shooters, "owned" by former Dallas Mavericks owner and billionaire entrepreneur Mark Cuban. They highlighted the goals of the team, announced plans for special events, went over similarities to other NBA markets, announced the Shooters' roster (Greg Oden, Ron Artest and Michael Beasley, to name a few) and ended with a special presentation by elite defensive player and Shooters team captain "Dennis Rodman."

"I expect to bring the first NBA Championship to Las Vegas," said Rodman, who came out of retirement to play for the Shooters.

When asked if the lures of Sin City may get him in trouble, Rodman shrugged it off in characteristic style. "Naw, I don't think I'll get in any trouble cause what happens in Las Vegas stays in Las Vegas," he said.

Then came a Q&A session with media heavyhitters such as ESPN, the New York Times, The Associated Press and The Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

Unfortunately for the city of Las Vegas, this press conference didn't take place in some fancy hotel on the Strip, but in 212 Dickinson Hall, the four young PR representatives aren't seasoned business veterans, but University of Massachusetts students. Dennis Rodman wasn't Dennis Rodman, either, rather a very tall and tattoo-adorned student play-acting.

While the Las Vegas Shooters may not be a reality, the work that went into promoting them was. Over the semester, students in Professor Connie Griffin's course, Principles of PR: From Nonprofit to Corporate have been working on their final project: a full-fledged PR campaign designed to promote something the students saw a need for.

As part of their assignment, the students must prepare for a mock press conference near the end of the year. Their classmates (and interested outsiders) act as both audience and press corps, posing questions that future PR mogul might be likely to face while rating their performance.

Students must also prepare a press kit with relevant information. The Shooters' for example, included owner, team management and player bios, a mock article and press release on the Shooters' Gambling Awareness Night and a fact sheet designed to familiarize readers with the market. The students also developed a Web site (www.lasvegasshooters.googlepages.com) for their fictional client which includes information on the team, ticket information and a calendar of events.

"Teaching this course has been a pleasure and it's the students who have made it so fun," said Professor Griffin. "They've worked in collaborative teams to create PR firms and clients from the ground up, developed PR campaigns, and presented press conferences to rival the professionals. Their media kits and logos are really sharp of professional quality. Many even developed websites for their clients."

Other students worked on campaigns for energy-infused coffee, an organic clothing line, and a non-profit foundation called CollegeBound, aimed at serving high school and college students and helping them continue their education. Other students presented a campaign for Club 413, a multi-tiered nightclub designed specifically for local students and defended allegations against a fictitious baseball all-star.

"I have been impressed with the educational component of many of the organizations, especially around issues of diversity, eco-consciousness and fair trade," Griffin commented.

The class, offered by the Journalism department, meets once a week in Dickinson Hall, and the students spend much of their time preparing for this final project. While they rely on each other to get things done, Professor Griffin makes sure to keep them on the right track.

The greatest challenge has been keeping an eye on group process because the class is large--about 50 students," she said. "That creates specific challenges for active learning, but I'm committed to collaborative learning and to having students apply the principles they are learning through action research."

The overall mood of the class is uncommon in most college classrooms. Students were engaged and active, and Griffin is very pleased with the results, crediting the students' hard work as the main reason for their success.

"The teams pulled together really well for the most part and the level of creativity has exceeded my expectations," she said. "That's a real pleasure for a professor and not something I take for granted. I thought they worked very hard and we had a lot of fun together."

Frank Vitale can be reached at fvitale@kinesis.umass.edu

EDITORIAL OPINION

A Vermont secession is only natural

Matthew M. Robare

I've had it. I'm just sick and tired of it, and so should every thinking person. War crimes are committed against her people practically daily and the world raises no outcry. An illegal military occupation has been underway for decades and no one speaks of it. A beautiful land is pillaged and ravaged regularly with no let-up. It must end.

The occupation of the Vermont Republic has gone on for 200 years and must end now. Ever since "joining" the Union, Vermont has borne the brunt of everything as part of the occupation.

Why else do more Vermonters per capita die in Washington's wars then any other people? It's like a careful genocide. Vermont is continually subjected to the most outrageous ridicule and unwarranted assaults on her honor.

I think Western Massachusetts should join the Vermont Republic when she reclaims her sovereignty.

One time Sean Hannity filmed a special segment for his show in Vermont, just to make fun of us Vermonters. Let's just say that the letter to the editor I wrote about helped me get this job as a Collegian columnist.

When Vermonters are allowed to act freely, they have inevitably acted on the side of liberty and justice. The Vermont Republic was the first nation in this hemisphere to outlaw slavery and Vermont's representatives in Congress always opposed the "peculiar institution."

Vermonters wisely opposed the fascist New Deal and any attempts made by the Works Progress Administration to steal land were often met by irate men with guns – and they were damn good shots. Vermont has some of the weakest gun control laws in the Union and the least gun deaths per capita.

But that was when Vermont still had home rule. Over the last 30 years, no native-born Vermonter has been elected governor. For me this is the most onerous sign of the occupation; we do not even have the illusion of self-governance.

The current governor, Jim Douglas, is from Springfield; Howard Dean was from Long Island; Richard Snelling was from Pennsylvania; and Madeline Kunin (a UMass alum, I may mention) was born in Zurich. Yes, Zurich. As in Switzerland. Thomas P. Salmon was from Cleveland, Ohio. Deane C. Davis, serving from 1969 to 1973, was the last Vermonter to be governor.

I suppose at this point, if you're still reading, you're saying to yourself "OK, but why should I care?"

The answer is simple. I think western Massachusetts should join the Vermont Republic when she reclaims her sovereignty. Western Massachusetts is culturally, politically, and ethnically contiguous with Vermont.

We share a great resource, the Connecticut River, and have had much literary intercourse in the past. Why, the agreement that would seal the deal could be called the Frost Pact, since Robert Frost is the greatest and most recognizable cultural link. He was after all a professor at Amherst College and a farmer outside of Middlebury.

Together Vermont and Western Massachusetts are strong. We could defend our sovereignty and our liberties to the bitter end, teach each other many things, and grow rich by backing our currency with Grade A maple syrup dumped into unused granite quarries.

Cows let on to interstates could block access for the U.S. military. We could trade with Cuba (via Canada). Best of all, we could dismantle Yankee Nuclear Power Plant. Seriously, that place is a disaster waiting to happen.

There would have to be some name changes obviously. For instance, Mass Turnpike? Now it's the Vermont Turnpike. UMass-Amherst? Now it's UVM-Amherst. Without the ability to make jokes about ZooMass our party school reputation will diminish and it might become possible to live in Southwest again.

The downside is that I'll miss UMassic Park in the Collegian and it will be confusing because the street names will have to be changed. (No more Massachusetts or Commonwealth Avenue.)

The dining hall names will have to be changed, too, except for Berkshire. I think Springfield, Vt., will have to be New Springfield, though, since Springfield, Mass., is so much larger.

Politically there will be more parity between old Vermont and new Vermont then there is between Western and Eastern Massachusetts. The towns here will have more representation in Montpelier then they do in Boston and the population is fairly equal.

But as I said, Vermont and Western Massachusetts are very similar culturally, geographically, and ethnically. There should be no political problems with unification.

The main difficulty is going to be economic. Vermont does not have the tax base to fund all the things it would have to fund, so a change would be in order. Government services would have to be cut back, certain ones would have to be privatized. Thomas Naylor has written extensively on what the Republic's economy should be like, and I urge you to check out his work.

Vermont will rise again.

Matthew R. Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu.

Apple vs Wal-Mart

Hannah Nelson

The joke about Wal-Mart taking over the world has been in circulation for a while, but there's a chance that iconic yellow smiley face had better watch his back before a Macintosh Apple takes a bite out of his rollback.

iTunes could be trumping the new generation of DVDs before they even got the chance for their 15 minutes of fame. Apple already has contracts with the majority of big movie studios, and has just recently won deals with many of those studios to start putting movies up on iTunes the same day as the DVD release date.

This is expected to take a good-sized chunk out of the DVD industry, and is coming on the tail end of a tooth and nail Blu-ray versus high definition DVD war. Apple could be the new tortoise in the race.

iTunes has become infamous among music stores for killing CD sales, and DVD producers must have that in the back of their minds with the revelation of synonymous release dates.

New movie releases appearing in the iTunes store on the same day as they are released on DVD adds to the growing advertisement scheme of skipping the video store for convenience. It's a scheme similar to methods used by On Demand and NetFlix.

iTunes could be trumping the new generation of DVDs before they even got the chance for their 15 minutes of fame.

New releases sold on iTunes will be sold for $14.99, several dollars less than most in-store prices for traditional DVDs (presumably a packaging and materials matter). Preexisting movies will remain at $9.99. New release Blu-ray discs are currently selling for double and triple the iTunes price.

This is a sign of Apple's buying power. They have won over a number of heavy hitting studios such as Warner Brothers and Disney, both of which have been and will be releasing Blu-ray DVDs at a rapid pace.

This raises the question of whether or not high definition televisions and DVDs will be history even before they got their chance in the limelight. It's true that many channels are now broadcasting in high definition, but movie sales were already fighting rampant piracy. If legal online availability of movies becomes more widely spread and popular, it could mean more than just sales trouble for the DVD era.

Blu-ray players were supposed to boom after they won over HD DVDs, but the sales of the players have been disappointing for producers this year. This is being accredited to post-holiday season sales slumps and to reluctant consumers hesitant to shell out a couple hundred dollars (or their tax rebates) on a player and more expensive discs.

Especially when they are fine to settle with non-high definition DVDs. The more traditional players have stayed consistent in sales, if not improved. But companies that put out the Blu-ray players don't plan on dropping prices anytime in the foreseeable future. This move could make Blu-ray just as extinct as HD.

The Apple power is stretching beyond just entertainment. More professionals are turning to Mac OS X and Leopard as their operating systems of choice, including the IT professionals who run the technical aspects of workplaces.

Microsoft is still the dominant player, no doubt, but Apple just has that certain appeal of brand recognition and a trademark worthy innovative streak keeping it strong. The MacBook Air's travel appeal alone has got many frequent fliers making systems swaps.

For comparison, Apple Stores exist in six, soon to be seven countries, with 209 stores globally. There are nearly 1,000 Wal-Mart stores in the United States and a total of nearly 3,000 in 14 other countries, Apple doesn't even begin to make a dent in the category.

According to Fortune 500's annual ranking, Wal-Mart took the top spot in 2008 for the second year in a row with $378.8 billion in revenue. In 2006 it had come in second only to Exxon Mobile. The list also included Dell, Hewlett-Packard, Microsoft, and Google, all beating out Apple's 103rd spot.

Apple's revenue came in at $24 billion, which drowns in the long shadow of Wal-Mart. Comparing Wal-Mart, to Apple is like comparing apples to oranges (no pun intended).

In which case, why should we even care whether or not Apple keeps acquiring monopolies? Apple has been slowly, steadily, and stealthily cutting out its competitors. It's doubtful that Apple will reach Wal-Mart sized proportions anytime soon despite the heavy brand recognition.

Maybe Apple fans are just incredibly hopeful that their brand of choice will eventually leave rivals Microsoft and assorted PCs in the dust. But I don't think that Apple has moved far enough beyond their safety net of brand loyal consumers who make up the majority of Apple's sales base.

Apple without a doubt has a following not unlike a cult classic, with a special subset dedicated to the iPhone. With the alluring product chains and the monopoly on MP3 players that has iPod doubling as a generic reference akin to what Kleenex did for tissues, it's always possible that Apple could be the next corporation superpower. The Apple takeover, if it happens, will be very subtle, taking the bite out one competitive medium at a time.

Hannah Nelson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at hnelson@student.umass.edu.

Hope and change for a third party

Eli Gottlieb

At this point in the races, Barack Obama remains in the lead of the Democratic primaries, with 1,845 pledged delegates and 257 super delegates. Hilary Clinton has 1,686 delegates and 267 super delegates. These are the cold, hard numbers that underlie every last little ounce of speculation and hype America's news apparatus churns out.

We worry about how the remaining super delegates will vote. We worry about who either contender could pick as a running mate after such a heated contest. We worry desperately that our chosen candidate won't win, and, for the record, I do support Barack Obama. Some Obama supporters even worry he'd be assassinated if he got the nomination.

But all too few people even bother to wonder about the motivations driving public figures into this glorified spectacle. Why do our senators (and all the candidates this year are senators) perform the political equivalent of stripping for tuition money month after month, exposing every detail of themselves to leering scrutiny?

Why do our Senators perform the political equivalent of stripping for tuition money month after month, exposing every detail of themselves to leering scrutiny?

OK, I honestly can't tell you anything of Barack Obama's motivations. In all honesty, his words and actions betray nothing but an idealistic belief that he can dramatically improve the country we live in – which shows, in a politician, either excellent acting skills or the real deal.

But Mrs. Clinton does not act nearly so well. Every last attack advertisement and snide little remark show us exactly what she wants.

She is Hilary Clinton, political suicide bomber. The point of her campaign, from the lesser volleys to the spreading of blatant lies, is to ensure that either she winds up the Democratic nominee or she destroys the Democratic Party in her efforts.

Mrs. Clinton currently plans to try and win the support of additional super delegates, allowing her to win the nomination without needing the vote of the people. She continues to try to win votes among lower-class, uneducated working whites (the polite way of saying "hicks") by imbibing alcoholic drinks that, under normal circumstances, only us underage, poor college students have to put up with.

And yeah, that's exactly what our country needs right now, especially Democrats. We need another extremely rich president (because who wants to elect a Republican after eight years of Bush?) unelected by the people, from a family one of whose members has already held the office. These eight years have been so darn joyful we're on our hands and knees begging for more.

Well, we're definitely on our hands and knees.

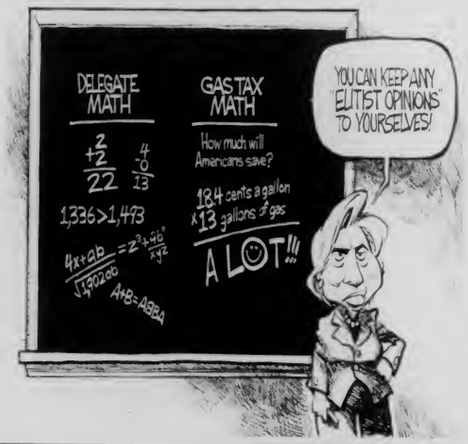
Yet these bitter primary fights have brought more young people and independents into the political process than ever before, particularly as Obama supporters. Our potential first black president has a groundswell of real support beneath him. Thus, I can dimly see a path forward, a way that the nation as a whole can benefit even if Hilary loses the nomination and manages to press the button on her metaphorical bomb belt.

If he loses the nomination of the Democratic Party, Barack Obama should take his supporters and found a new political party. Now, before anyone reminds me how pathetically third parties usually fare in our electoral process (thank you first-past-the-post voting system), remember that Abraham Lincoln ran on the ticket of what was, at the time, a third party: the fledgling Republican Party. Third parties can win a place for themselves by displacing a dying major party.

And I do see the Democratic Party dying. In 2004 they decided to run John Kerry on the basis that he was "electable." As Jon Stewart and Stephen Colbert only noticed this year (my whole family of Kucinich supporters knew it when it happened), "electability" actually meant nothing more than being the most boring, middle-of-the-road candidate available.

That's right, they knowingly (if with extreme rationalization) ran the most boring candidate they could find for president of the United States rather than throw their collective support behind someone who actually took positions.

Lo and behold, after four years of George W. Bush, they managed to take a candidate who, thanks to his lack of distinguishable features of any kind, had no distinguishable faults, and outright fascist elements of our country.



They have, in short, become the worst kind of conservatives, despite their reputation for liberalism. I cannot remember the last time the Democratic Party ran a really liberal candidate for any office higher than district attorney.

But Barack Obama draws in support by simple force of personality and intelligence. His rhetoric of hope makes people feel that it can be done, whatever it may be.

If it weren't the specific national anthem of the Jewish State (Happy Israeli Independence Day, by the way), I would even recommend that Obama invent and sing "Ha Tikvah" (translation: "The Hope").

If the time has come to desert a party structure that has failed its supporters, failed the American people, and now stands poised to destroy itself in a fit of aristocratic pique, then I think Obama is the one to lead us somewhere new.

Eli Gottlieb is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at egottlie@student.umass.edu.

The ED/OP page:

Striking fear in the hearts of Aussie's everywhere

Editorial@dailycollegian.com

EDITORIAL OPINION

A Vermont secession is only natural

Matthew M. Robare

I've had it. I'm just sick and tired of it, and so should every thinking person. War crimes are committed against her people practically daily and the world raises no outcry. An illegal military occupation has been underway for decades and no one speaks of it. A beautiful land is pillaged and ravaged regularly with no let-up. It must end.

The occupation of the Vermont Republic has gone on for 200 years and must end now. Ever since "joining" the Union, Vermont has borne the brunt of everything as part of the occupation.

Why else do more Vermonters per capita die in Washington's wars then any other people? It's like a careful genocide. Vermont is continually subjected to the most outrageous ridicule and unwarranted assaults on her honor.

I think Western Massachusetts should join the Vermont Republic when she reclaims her sovereignty.

One time Sean Hannity filmed a special segment for his show in Vermont, just to make fun of us Vermonters. Let's just say that the letter to the editor I wrote about helped me get this job as a Collegian columnist.

When Vermonters are allowed to act freely, they have inevitably acted on the side of liberty and justice. The Vermont Republic was the first nation in this hemisphere to outlaw slavery and Vermont's representatives in Congress always opposed the "peculiar institution."

Vermonters wisely opposed the fascist New Deal and any attempts made by the Works Progress Administration to steal land were often met by irate men with guns – and they were damn good shots. Vermont has some of the weakest gun control laws in the Union and the least gun deaths per capita.

But that was when Vermont still had home rule. Over the last 30 years, no native-born Vermonter has been elected governor. For me this is the most onerous sign of the occupation; we do not even have the illusion of self-governance.

The current governor, Jim Douglas, is from Springfield; Howard Dean was from Long Island; Richard Snelling was from Pennsylvania; and Madeline Kunin (a UMass alum, I may mention) was born in Zurich. Yes, Zurich. As in Switzerland. Thomas P. Salmon was from Cleveland, Ohio. Deane C. Davis, serving from 1969 to 1973, was the last Vermonter to be governor.

I suppose at this point, if you're still reading, you're saying to yourself "OK, but why should I care?"

The answer is simple: I think western Massachusetts should join the Vermont Republic when she reclaims her sovereignty. Western Massachusetts is culturally, politically, and ethnically contiguous with Vermont.

We share a great resource, the Connecticut River, and have had much literary intercourse in the past. Why, the agreement that would seal the deal could be called the Frost Pact, since Robert Frost is the greatest and most recognizable cultural link. He was after all a professor at Amherst College and a farmer outside of Middlebury.

Together Vermont and Western Massachusetts are strong. We could defend our sovereignty and our liberties to the bitter end, teach each other many things, and grow rich by backing our currency with Grade A maple syrup dumped into unused granite quarries.

Cows let on to interstates could block access for the U.S. military. We could trade with Cuba (via Canada). Best of all, we could dismantle Yankee Nuclear Power Plant. Seriously, that place is a disaster waiting to happen.

There would have to be some name changes obviously. For instance, Mass Turnpike? Now it's the Vermont Turnpike. UMass-Amherst? Now it's UVM-Amherst. Without the ability to make jokes about ZooMass our party school reputation will diminish and it might become possible to live in Southwest again.

The downside is that I'll miss UMassic Park in the Collegian and it will be confusing because the street names will have to be changed. (No more Massachusetts or Commonwealth Avenue.)

The dining hall names will have to be changed, too, except for Berkshire. I think Springfield, Vt., will have to be New Springfield, though, since Springfield, Mass., is so much larger.

Politically, there will be more parity between old Vermont and new Vermont then there is between Western and Eastern Massachusetts. The towns here will have more representation in Montpelier then they do in Boston and the population is fairly equal.

But as I said, Vermont and Western Massachusetts are very similar culturally, geographically, and ethnically. There should be no political problems with unification.

The main difficulty is going to be economic. Vermont does not have the tax base to fund all the things it would have to fund, so a change would be in order. Government services would have to be cut back, certain ones would have to be privatized. Thomas Naylor has written extensively on what the Republic's economy should be like, and I urge you to check out his work.

Vermont will rise again.

Matthew R. Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu.

Apple vs Wal-Mart

Hannah Nelson

The joke about Wal-Mart taking over the world has been in circulation for a while, but there's a chance that iconic yellow smiley face had better watch his back before a Macintosh Apple takes a bite out of his rollback.

iTunes could be trumping the new generation of DVDs before they even got the chance for their 15 minutes of fame. Apple already has contracts with the majority of big movie studios, and has just recently won deals with many of those studios to start putting movies up on iTunes the same day as the DVD release date.

This is expected to take a good-sized chunk out of the DVD industry, and is coming on the tail end of a tooth and nail Blu-ray versus high definition DVD war. Apple could be the new tortoise in the race.

iTunes has become infamous among music stores for killing CD sales, and DVD producers must have that in the back of their minds with the revelation of synonymous release dates.

New movie releases appearing in the iTunes store on the same day as they are released on DVD adds to the growing advertisement scheme of skipping the video store for convenience. It's a scheme similar to methods used by On Demand and NetFlix.

iTunes could be trumping the new generation of DVDs before they even got the chance for their 15 minutes of fame.

New releases sold on iTunes will be sold for $14.99, several dollars less than most in-store prices for traditional DVDs (presumably a packaging and materials matter). Preexisting movies will remain at $9.99. New release Blu-ray discs are currently selling for double and triple the iTunes price.

This is a sign of Apple's buying power. They have won over a number of heavy hitting studios such as Warner Brothers and Disney, both of which have been and will be releasing Blu-ray DVDs at a rapid pace.

This raises the question of whether or not high definition televisions and DVDs will be history even before they got their chance in the limelight. It's true that many channels are now broadcasting in high definition, but movie sales were already fighting rampant piracy. If legal online availability of movies becomes more widely spread and popular, it could mean more than just sales trouble for the DVD era.

Blu-ray players were supposed to boom after they won over HD DVDs, but the sales of the players have been disappointing for producers this year. This is being accredited to post-holiday season sales slumps and to reluctant consumers hesitant to shell out a couple hundred dollars (or their tax rebates) on a player and more expensive discs.

Especially when they are fine to settle with non-high definition DVDs. The more traditional players have stayed consistent in sales, if not improved. But companies that put out the Blu-ray players don't plan on dropping prices anytime in the foreseeable future. This move could make Blu-ray just as extinct as HD.

The Apple power is stretching beyond just entertainment. More professionals are turning to Mac OS X and Leopard as their operating systems of choice, including the IT professionals who run the technical aspects of workplaces.

Microsoft is still the dominant player, no doubt, but Apple just has that certain appeal of brand recognition and a trademark worthy innovative streak keeping it strong. The MacBook Air's travel appeal alone has got many frequent fliers making systems swaps.

For comparison, Apple Stores exist in six, soon to be seven countries, with 209 stores globally. There are nearly 1,000 Wal-Mart stores in the United States and a total of nearly 3,000 in 14 other countries. Apple doesn't even begin to make a dent in the category.

According to Fortune 500's annual ranking, Wal-Mart took the top spot in 2008 for the second year in a row with $378.8 billion in revenue. In 2006 it had come in second only to Exxon Mobile. The list also included Dell, Hewlett-Packard, Microsoft, and Google, all beating out Apple's 103rd spot.

Apple's revenue came in at $24 billion, which drowns in the long shadow of Wal-Mart. Comparing Wal-Mart, to Apple is like comparing apples to oranges (no pun intended).

In which case, why should we even care whether or not Apple keeps acquiring monopolies? Apple has been slowly, steadily, and stealthily cutting out its competitors. It's doubtful that Apple will reach Wal-Mart sized proportions anytime soon despite the heavy brand recognition.

Maybe Apple fans are just incredibly hopeful that their brand of choice will eventually leave rivals Microsoft and assorted PCs in the dust. But I don't think that Apple has moved far enough beyond their safety net of brand loyal consumers who make up the majority of Apple's sales base.

Apple without a doubt has a following not unlike a cult classic, with a special subset dedicated to the iPhone. With the alluring product chains and the monopoly on MP3 players that has iPod doubling as a generic reference akin to what Kleenex did for tissues, it's always possible that Apple could be the next corporation superpower. The Apple takeover, if it happens, will be very subtle, taking the bite out one competitive medium at a time.

Hannah Nelson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at hnelson@student.umass.edu.

Hope and change for a third party

Eli Gottlieb

At this point in the races, Barack Obama remains in the lead of the Democratic primaries, with 1,845 pledged delegates and 257 super delegates. Hilary Clinton has 1,686 delegates and 267 super delegates. These are the cold, hard numbers that underlie every last little ounce of speculation and hype America's news apparatus churns out.

Why do our Senators perform the political equivalent of stripping for tuition money month after month, exposing every detail of themselves to leering scrutiny?

We worry about how the remaining super delegates will vote. We worry about who either contender could pick as a running mate after such a heated contest. We worry desperately that our chosen candidate won't win, and, for the record, I do support Barack Obama. Some Obama supporters even worry he'd be assassinated if he got the nomination.

But all too few people even bother to wonder about the motivations driving public figures into this glorified spectacle. Why do our senators (and all the candidates this year are senators) perform the political equivalent of stripping for tuition money month after month, exposing every detail of themselves to leering scrutiny?

OK, I honestly can't tell you anything of Barack Obama's motivations. In all honesty, his words and actions betray nothing but an idealistic belief that he can dramatically improve the country we live in – which shows, in a politician, either excellent acting skills or the real deal.

But Mrs. Clinton does not act nearly so well. Every last attack advertisement and snide little remark show us exactly what she wants.

She is Hilary Clinton, political suicide bomber. The point of her campaign, from the lesser volleys to the spreading of blatant lies, is to ensure that either she winds up the Democratic nominee or she desiroys the Democratic Party in her efforts.

Mrs. Clinton currently plans to try and win the support of additional super delegates, allowing her to win the nomination without needing the vote of the people. She continues to try to win votes among lower-class, uneducated working whites (the polite way of saying "hicks") by imbibing alcoholic drinks that, under normal circumstances, only us underage, poor college students have to put up with.

And yeah, that's exactly what our country needs right now, especially Democrats. We need another extremely rich president (because who wants to elect a Republican after eight years of Bush?) unelected by the people, from a family one of whose members has already held the office. These eight years have been so darn joyful we're on our hands and knees begging for more.

Well, we're definitely on our hands and knees.

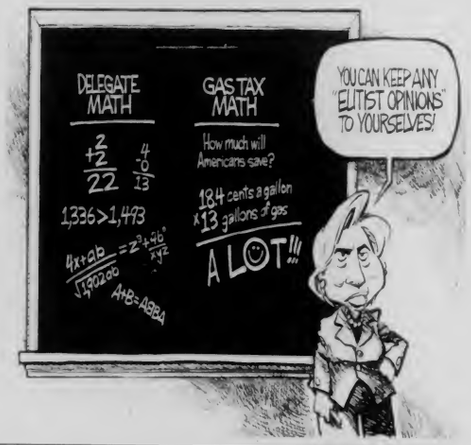
Yet these bitter primary fights have brought more young people and independents into the political process than ever before, particularly as Obama supporters. Our potential first black president has a groundswell of real support beneath him. Thus, I can dimly see a path forward, a way that the nation as a whole can benefit even if Hilary loses the nomination and manages to press the button on her metaphorical bomb belt.

If he loses the nomination of the Democratic Party, Barack Obama should take his supporters and found a new political party. Now, before anyone reminds me how pathetically third parties usually fare in our electoral process (thank you first-past-the-post voting system), remember that Abraham Lincoln ran on the ticket of what was, at the time, a third party: the fledgling Republican Party. Third parties can win a place for themselves by displacing a dying major party.

And I do see the Democratic Party dying. In 2004 they decided to run John Kerry on the basis that he was "electable." As Jon Stewart and Stephen Colbert only noticed this year (my whole family of Kucinich supporters knew it when it happened), "electability" actually meant nothing more than being the most boring, middle-of-the-road candidate available.

That's right, they knowingly (if with extreme rationalization) ran the most boring candidate they could find for president of the United States rather than throw their collective support behind someone who actually took positions.

Lo and behold, after four years of George W. Bush, they managed to take a candidate who, thanks to his lack of distinguishable features of any kind, had no distinguishable faults, and outright fascist elements of our country.



They have, in short, become the worst kind of conservatives, despite their reputation for liberalism. I cannot remember the last time the Democratic Party ran a really liberal candidate for any office higher than district attorney.

But Barack Obama draws in support by simple force of personality and intelligence. His rhetoric of hope makes people feel that it can be done, whatever it may be.

If it weren't the specific national anthem of the Jewish State (Happy Israeli Independence Day, by the way), I would even recommend that Obama invent and sing "Ha Tikvah" (translation: "The Hope").

If the time has come to desert a party structure that has failed its supporters, failed the American people, and now stands poised to destroy itself in a fit of aristocratic pique, then I think Obama is the one to lead us somewhere new.

Eli Gottlieb is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at egottlie@student.umass.edu.

The ED/OP page:

Striking fear in the hearts of Aussie's everywhere

Editorial@dailycollegian.com

Break free from your body cage

BY HEATHER WAXMAN
C. ITHIAN STAFF

Living in a fast-paced, media-obsessed world where pin-thin celebrities and fad diets incessantly dominate headlines, disordered eating seems almost inevitable.

A recent, groundbreaking survey issued by Self magazine disclosed a shocking revelation: A whopping 65 percent of women are disordered eaters and another one in 10 suffer from eating disorders.

This sparks yet another spine-chilling realization: 75 percent of American women think and act abnormally around food.

Banishing carbs, skipping meals, and other symptoms of extreme dieting are often considered to be normal behaviors by women, but in reality, they only add fuel to the fire.

Though disordered eating does not possess the potentially fatal outcomes of full-blown eating disorders, it can still cause considerable physical and emotional harm, says Cynthia Bulik, Ph.D., in a recent interview with Self.

Bulik, director of the eating disorders program at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and partner in Self's survey, found that women who are disordered eaters tend to fall into one or more of six categories: calorie prisoners, secret eaters, career dieters, purgers, food addicts, and extreme exercisers.

Disordered eaters are inclined to fall into more than one of the classifications and, if they refuse to face their issues, are likely to teeter-totter between categories over the years.

Calorie prisoners, the most common category of disordered eaters, are terrified of the notion of gaining weight and are likely to have a rigid mindset, tracking their caloric intake and strictly viewing food as good or bad. If these women indulge in a food they consider to be "off-limits," typically those higher in fat and carbohydrates, they experience supreme amounts of guilt.

35 percent of women are secret eaters. It is typical for them to binge on junk food at home or in the car – wherever they will not be found out. In extreme cases, secret eaters may claim they have already eaten in order to avoid a night out to dinner with close friends, opting to stay home and eat in seclusion.

Career dieters have made dieting a key role for three-fourths or more of their adult life, 6 percent of whom diet full time. Along the journey to a healthy lifestyle, these women tend to become perplexed over what to eat without a specific meal plan. Despite their best efforts, they are more likely than the other types to be overweight or obese.

Roughly one in three women have vomited or used laxatives or diuretics as a means to lose weight. Purgers frequently engage in such activities, some on a daily basis. They are tormented by ridding their bodies of unwanted calories and bloat from reverting to such extreme measures.

Food addicts consider food much like a drug addict views drugs. They eat to soothe stress, deal with anger, and celebrate joyous occasions. The 13 percent of women that make up this group think about food nearly every hour and are more susceptible to eat when they are not hungry.

Contrary to popular belief, of the six categories, extreme exercisers are the least widespread. Less than 1 percent of women work out despite illness, injury, or exhaustion solely for weight loss. Extreme exercisers are devastated if they miss a session and will compensate by working out even more strenuously next time around.

In principle, is it fair to pin all of this on the media?

According to Professor Reed Mangels, Ph.D., a lecturer in the nutrition department at the University of Massachusetts and vegan registered dietician, the media deserve a stern wag of the finger.

"I think the media has a lot to do with it," she says. "The stereotypical picture of models and entertainers is very thin – unrealistically so in a lot of cases. Now, the many pressures to overeat makes people more focused on food and creates conflict. It's harder than it's ever been."

This internal conflict can trigger two prospects: feeling a lack of control and a downward spiral of extreme measures, be it an eating disorder or the six aforementioned categories of disordered eating.

Control is a major issue, proving that disordered behavior does in fact extend beyond the admiration of unrealistic body images and skinny celebrities.

You cannot control the poor grade you received on last Friday's exam or the latest fight with your significant other. You can, however, easily control what goes into your body and the amount of exercise in which you partake.

As women set such outrageous goals as three hours on the treadmill or 1,000 calorie-a-day diets, a vicious cycle of unworthiness takes precedence.

"I think people always hope it will be different," says Mangels, "It [extreme measures] is like setting the bar higher for yourself. Here, it heads to a cycle of 'I didn't do it right' and 'I am a worthless person.' It almost seems like they are setting themselves up for failure."

A woman can cause serious detriment to her body by going on a venturesome, low-calorie diet. Consuming mainly low-fat foods is fatal to a woman's bone health, escalating the likelihood of developing an irreversible form of osteoporosis, hair loss, brittle nails, and serious nerve damage.

FILE PHOTO | UMASS DAILY COLLEGIAN

Though anorexia and bulimia are the most publicized eating disorders, other unhealthy behaviors surrounding food are on the rise, according to a recent Self magazine article.

Fifty-three percent of the disordered eaters in the Self survey ranked in at a healthy weight.

Thankfully, there is a light at the end of the tunnel.

"In my practice, relinquishing rules often leads to permanent weight loss," says Bulik.

Tip number one: Focus on the inside. Find a role model you can relate to. Kate Bosworth may be sweet as pie, but as far as pinpointing a body to emulate, she doesn't quite make the draft. Opt for someone whom you are close to and reflects your values.

Tip number two: Even out your eating. Disordered eaters are all-too-accustomed to extreme measures. A more moderate approach can help ward off unhealthy decisions. For starters, eat breakfast every day; it plays a vital role in avoiding binging later on, says Bulik.

Tip number three: Separate your mood from food. The next time someone ticks you off and you head for the closest vending machine, think twice. Ask yourself if you are really hungry and consider alternative ways of dealing with your anger, such as approaching the person directly or recording your thoughts in a journal.

Making a conscious effort to work on these guidelines can provide disordered eaters with an unfamiliar yet monumental belief: confidence. Emanating the stance that women possess beauty regardless of their size can catch on if you display that extra dose of moxy. Let's start today. Let's start with you.

Heather Waxman can be reached at hwaxman@student.umass.edu.

Sex: UMass style

SEX ON THE LAWN from page 1

WMUA 91.1 provided the soundtrack for the day, playing something from every genre, from John Mayer to Michael Jackson.

UMass student Kate Fontaine, the secretary of VOX, and the 13 active members have been planning the event since the fall.

"We put together some fun activities and a lot of information tables," said Fontaine, who is majoring in history, legal studies and women's studies.

One of the main issues VOX deals with is ending abstinence-only sex education and promoting the availability of contraception.

Fontaine continued to say that though the majority of the booths were about pro-sex education, VOX has a much bigger message that is reflected in the diversity of groups represented yesterday, though she admits that "one of our biggest things is condom providing."

She said that with over 3,000 offered, they are usually gone by the end of the day.

There was information on how to self-check for breast cancer and what to expect at a mammogram, among other women's health issues, and many other tables in support of woman and human rights.

One club, Transnational Feminist Issues, a group in its second year, set up their booth to represent "Latin American indigenous women and reproductive freedoms."

Lauren Mahoney, a co-founder of the group, said this year's "Sex on the Lawn" marked their second appearance at the event. Last year, they highlighted the issue of female circumcision.

"We come and present a global women's issue," said Mahoney. She said the best part of being involved with "Sex on the Lawn" is getting to talk with people.

"Everybody has so many questions and it's so nice to answer them. The whole point of the event is education," she said.

Even political issues were represented, with a 'Save Darfur' group trying to raise awareness and another table recruiting students to campaign for the White House during the summer.

Adam Wajsfelner, a student working the recruiting table, thought his group fit in with the theme of the day.

"I think campaigning is pretty sexy," Wajsfelner said.

VOX: Students for Choice, is a UMass registered student organization. Sex on the Lawn is just one of many events the group organizes about sex-education awareness. Each semester, they sponsor two events, the Hanger Project and the Beta Project, to educate the public about abortion procedures before they were legal.

For the Hanger Project, VOX suspends hangers along the library lawn, each with a fact or statistic dangling from the wire, like "87 percent of U.S. counties don't have an abortion provider," said Fontaine.

The Beta project invites women who have had illegal abortions to discuss their harrowing experience, stressing the importance of how legal abortions have contributed to the safety of women.

They also frequently have dorm parties, send around petitions and keep tabs on local pharmacies, ensuring they are provided affordable and over-the-counter emergency contraception.

Stephanie McPherson can be reached at smcpherson@dailycollegian.com

BRIAN TEDDER, COLLEGIAN

VOX: Students for Choice, is a UMass registered student organization. Sex on the Lawn is just one of many events the group organizes about sex-education awareness.

The Source

(the sors) n. key to discovering the weekly happenings of Western Mass for Five-College students

Friday, May 9

ART

The Festival of the Arts takes place from 1 to 4 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Plaza and lobby. The free event features student performances, interactive art pieces and a small art exhibit.

FILM

For the University Programming Council's "Something Every Friday," a screening of "Rambo" will take place at 8 and 10 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge. The event, as always, is free and an encore screening will take place on Sunday at 8 p.m. in the same location.

LITERATURE

Reeve Lindbergh, daughter of famed aviator Charles Lindbergh, will read from her new book, "Forward from Here: Leaving Middle Age and Other Unexpected Adventures," at the Odyssey Bookshop located in South Hadley. The event begins at 7 p.m. and is free and open to the public.

THEATER

"Stop Kiss," a play written by Diana Son and directed by Sarah Fingerman about what happens when two New York women find love in each other, will be performed by the UMass Theater Guild at 8 p.m. tonight and Saturday. All the performances will take place at the Renaissance Center, located at 650 E. Pleasant in Amherst. Tickets are $10 for the general public and $5 for Five-College students.

DANCE

"All Walls Down," a student-dance presentation sponsored by UMass's Alive With Dance group, will take place at 8 p.m. in Kendall Sports & Dance Complex at Mount Holyoke College. The program will include dance pieces that explore themes of feminism, nostalgia and communication. Tickets are $10 for the general public and $5 for Five-College students.

Saturday, May 10

MUSIC

The Campus Center Auditorium hosts the fifth annual UMass Pops Gal at 7:30. fifth. The band will play music by the Beatles, Rossini and Tchaikovsky as well as selections from "Hairspray" and "Carousel." Tickets are $45. Call the FAC box office for more information.

THEATER

Mission IMPROVable will perform their last show of the semester at 8 p.m. in Herter Hall 231. The event is free and open to the public.

Sunday, May 11

The string quartets and piano trios present a free concert at 7:30 in Bezanson Recital Hall. They will play works by Beethoven, Brahms and many other composers.

Compiled by Alex Roth, Collegian Staff

FINE DINING & SPIRITS
A Locally Grown Eatery and Catering Company
BUTTERNUTS
Be A Local Hero Buy Locally Grown
Butternuts congratulates seniors and welcomes the UMass community to join us for our creative New England cuisine.
Make your graduation plans now!
Hours: Tues - Thurs 11-9 | Fri - Sat 11-10 | Sun 11-9
Closed Mondays
See our full menu on our Website!
413-586-0234
195 Russell Street
www.butternutsonline.com

Butternuts Features:
The freshest & finest local products
Celiac Friendly/ Gluten Free Dining
Full Service Bar with Celiac & Organic Selections
Vegan/ Vegetarian Selections
Extensive Wine Menu with Organic Selections

College co-ed's dollar-menu challenge

Bored, hungry and short on cash, two UMass students set out on a quest to find the most superior snack wrap. The various fast food restaurants in the local area offer dollar menus that allow collegiates the chance to indulge their taste buds without burning a hole in their pockets.

By Corey Hodges and R.J. Boutelle
Collegian Correspondents

Here's the scene: It's approaching midnight on a Friday. You go to the University of Massachusetts, so naturally you're probably engaging in some questionable activities, with or without friends. You're mellowing out, watching the tube, when suddenly – a wretched sound is unearthed from the inner depths of your stomach, a sound capable of converting even the most passionate atheist into a God-fearing churchgoer.

You try to ignore ravenous hunger, which has started to consume your every thought. However, the television programmers have different ideas: commercial after commercial of late-night fast food vendors. Secretly, you accuse the television programmers of being the bastard children of sin itself, but they're right. One glance at the Golden Arches, the smiling redhead, or the distinguished colonel and they've got you hooked faster than the tobacco companies.

You need food, and not just any food will do. Those sinister commercials have sown the seeds of desire and now only the savory nectars of the fast food industry will stay your culinary lust.

A quick look in your wallet reminds you that you are indeed still in college. We'll assume you've got a car (or Bob across the hall will let you borrow his) but alas, funds are tight.

Fortunately, every fast food chain has a "dollar menu," which, despite the falling value of the dollar with Lemon constant because it comprises the majority of the franchise's revenue.

But you're in the mood for something a little different. As those blasted commercials have been advertising for some time now, the "chicken snack wrap" (CSW) is making its mark on every fast food, world stage.

CSWs have recently become menu staples at a triumvirate of fast food chains: Wendy's, McDonald's and KFC. Our researchers sampled from each of these uber-America n fast food palaces to bring you the facts.

These CSWs come in two broad varieties: crispy and grilled.

In comparison, grilled chicken has obvious health benefits: lower calorie count, lower cholesterol, no carbs, lower sodium, etc. However, if we are to remain true to our American roots as big fatties, the mere thought of this grilled subset of poultry should be an affront to our very nature.

Additionally, the unanimous decision was grilled chicken lacks the elusive "delicious factor," a variable that more than compensates for the disparities in nutritional value.

Now to the guts of the research (or alternatively those of the chickens that were, in fact, harmed to make this all possible). Much to the misfortune of their arteries each dining companion tested the entire CSW spectrum, including seven varieties of wraps from the three different eateries.

McDonald's, the founding father of the CSW movement, with the "Snack Wrap," provided a range of three options based around their choice of sauces: ranch (an American favorite and a waistline's bane,) honey mustard and chipotle barbeque.

"If you're going go to McDonald's, you got to heat it up with the chipotle and cool it back down with the ranch," said Jason Stencel, UMass sophomore.

At about 335 calories, 145 calories from fat (about 25 percent daily value [DV] of fat intake), 10 percent DV of cholesterol and about 33 percent DV of sodium apiece, all three are sure belt-busters. They all rank in with 14 grams of protein, which is their singular redeeming feature.

"The Chipotle BBQ was a slowly accelerating pleasure-train in my mouth: each bite was better than the last, until I inwardly wept at the train wreck that was the empty wrapper," said Ankit Chandra, a junior economics major at UMass.

The other taste testers, while maybe less enthusiastic, agree. The honey mustard flavor didn't even receive an honorable mention. It was blown away by the other two varieties – and the sauce just wasn't as tasty as expected.

KFC's new "Toasted Wrap" was next on the CSW adventure.

With comparable calories (albeit more calories from fat) and sodium levels, 30 percent DV of total fat, 13 percent DV of total cholesterol, and only marginally more protein, this is clearly the least healthy choice of CSWs tested thus far.

Furthermore, the researchers agreed that it was devastatingly more disappointing than their expectations had led them to hope.

You'd think with the word "chicken" in the name of the establishment they'd already be ahead of the game, but it was definitely a letdown. The chicken tasted the same as the rest of KFC's menu except with an awkward charred flavor from the tortilla itself.

Finally, our researchers visited the red-headed goddess of fast food chicken products: Wendy's.

Ignoring the grilled option again, Wendy's offers two other varieties: homestyle (plain crispy-style chicken, with ranch sauce) and spicy (also served with ranch sauce). The taste testers were intrigued by "spicy' like a teenage boy is allured by the stripper bar he passes every day on his way home from school: so enticing from the outside, but what lies within?

First, a look at the nutritional info: both options weigh in with 320 calories (140 from fat, approx 25 percent DV total fat), 12 percent DV of cholesterol, and about 16g of protein. Running the numbers, the Wendy's varieties are only a pinch unhealthier than their McDonald's counterparts.

However, they both contain the "delicious factor" in high quantities, especially the "Spicy Go Wrap." The dining companions almost unanimously agreed with Stencel, who said, "Spicy is ballin' "

Though he agreed that "spicy" is at the top of the taste charts, Chandra raised vital concerns about presentation.

"It fell apart right after I unwrapped the wrapper – kind of like my love life," Chandra said despondently. "It was good, but the construction is every bit as important as the taste, especially if these are being eaten on the go."

"You got to squeeze it," said Stencel. "Otherwise it falls apart. Or all the sauce leaks to the bottom and drips out."

Surely, such advice would come in handy with any CSW, or romantic, encounter. In short: Spicy still wins out the day, with a 75 percent vote from the researchers.

This article should end with some advice such as "make healthy decisions" but that seems kind of futile.

So instead, indulge yourself with other epic fast food adventure ideas.

For starters, there's always the "Dollar Menu Decathlon." Grab all your friends, head to McDonald's with $10.50 in hand each, and chow down. (Tip: you might want to start with fewer than 10 items – your cardiovascular system and bowels will thank you for the practice.)

Alternatively, as our researchers have done previously, take on the Burger King Quad-stacker challenge: eat as many Quad-stackers as you can, so long as you know the proper Latin prefix. (Tip: Quad-stacker = four patties, Octo-Stacker equals eight patties equals two Quad-stackers; Duodeci-Stacker equals 12 patties equals three Quadstackers, etc.)

Take advantage, dear reader, for if you don't enjoy these epic adventures now, when you still have a chance of bouncing back from the arterial damage, or at least have a little time to find a good cardiologist, then you might never get to enjoy them at all.

Minutewomen drop Rams, 49ers up next

Maroney's single gives UMass win

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts softball team advanced to the second round of the Atlantic 10 Tournament with a 2-0 win over Fordham yesterday afternoon. UMass plays Charlotte today at 2 p.m.

UMass and Fordham stood deadlocked at 0-0 until freshman Lindsay Maroney hit a two-out single to left field scoring sophomore Jill Andrews, who was pinch running on the play. Maroney is getting her first taste of tournament play; she batted .387 during the season and has shown the ability to come up with clutch hits, batting .448 with two outs.

UMass	2
Fordham	0

"I thought she came up big. I wasn't surprised at all," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said when asked if she was surprised that the freshman got the first big hit. "I'm always glad to see her coming to the plate."

Sophomore catcher Jessica Serio added some insurance by knocking a double to left-center, scoring junior right fielder Samantha Salato from second. Serio went 2-for-3, but no other UMass player had two hits.

"Great for our team to get this win under our belt," Sortino said. "I felt like we were a little tight in the beginning, but we really worked it out."

Balschmiter did not allow any runs, giving UMass its 20th shutout of the season. She went seven innings and allowed four hits and walking three. Balschmiter struck out three batters, while on the season she averaged 8.32 strikeouts per game. She didn't let up any extra base hits as all four hits came on singles.

"I thought she did her job," Sortino said. "She took a close game and got the job done for us."

The team helped her in the field by playing errorless defense. The Rams best chance to score came in the fourth when they had a runner on second with freshman Meghan Shager at bat. Shager hit a single into left field, giving Fordham a chance to score from second, but senior left fielder Lauren Proctor hit Serio on target to make the out at home.

"I thought we played outstanding defense," Sortino said. "They made all the plays."

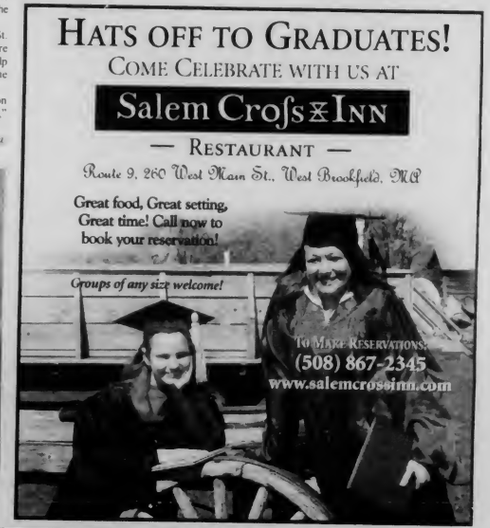
This isn't the first time Fordham has taken UMass down to the wire. Fordham almost defeated UMass on March 20. The Rams scored two runs off Balschmiter to hold a 2-1 lead in the top of the seventh, but UMass rallied late to win 4-2. In second game of the doubleheader Fordham was shutout by sophomore pitcher Bailey Sanders in a 1-0 victory. All three games against Fordham were close with UMass pulling off the same result, showing it can win tight games.

"We're ready to play, I think you have to expect teams to come at you at this time of the year, and if you want to advance you have to be able to handle these kinds of games," Sortino said. "I think it shows that we are on task and we're in a good place."

The last time Balschmiter let up a run was against Charlotte on March 30 when UMass won, 7-1. The run was unearned, however, as the Minutewomen committed two errors in the game. UMass beat Charlotte in Game 2 of the season series, 5-2.

Charlotte knocked off No. 2 seed St. Bonaventure, 4-0, yesterday. Sophomore Emily Jeffery threw a three-hit shutout to help the 49ers advance to the next round against the Minutewomen.

"It's going to be a tough game, we are on their turf and we have to be ready to play," Sortino said.



Steve Games can be reached at sgames@dailycollegian.com.

Junior Samantha Salato went 1-for-3 and scored a run in UMass's 2-0 victory yesterday. The Minutewomen will play Charlotte at 2 p.m. today in the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

Brandice Balschmiter led the Minutewomen to a 2-0 victory over Fordham in their first game of the Atlantic 10 Tournament. She allowed four hits in seven innings pitched.

Vail Regatta up next for UM

By Jeff R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts rowing team will race five boats this weekend in the 70th annual Dad Vail Regatta in Philadelphia.

Over 3,000 rowers from 115 schools, from the United States and Canada, are expected to compete in 2,000-meter course on the Schuylkill River. The Dad Vail Regatta is the largest in the United States and will host more than 150 races in the two-day event.

The Minutewomen will race their Varsity 8, Second Varsity 8, Varsity 4, Novice 8 and Novice 4 boats. All five boats will race in heats on Friday, and if they advance, will race in the semifinals and finals on Saturday.

The first boat to race for UMass on Friday will be the Varsity 4. There will be nine heats and 49 other boats taking place in the heats, with UMass racing in the final heat in lane six.

The top two boats in each heat will advance to the three semifinal heats with the top two in each semifinal advancing to the finals.

The Minutewomen's Varsity 8 will race with 39 other boats in the seven preliminaries heats.

The schools that finish from third to fifth will move on to the repachage later on Friday and will race in four separate heats. The fastest boat in each of the repachage will move on to the semifinals.

The Novice 4 race will have 45 schools competing in nine heats. UMass will race in lane one of the seventh heat. The Novice 4 will follow the same structure for the semifinals and finals as the Varsity 4. The seventh heat of the preliminaries will also include John Carroll, Marquette, Emory and Carnegie Mellon.

One of the more successful boats for the Minutewomen in the past few weeks, the Novice 8, will race in the third heat of its six heat preliminaries. The Novice 8 will race against Lafayette, Philadelphia, Georgia Tech and Stony Brook for the opportunity to advance to the semifinals.

The last race for the Minutewomen on Friday will be the Second Varsity 8, which has received a top seed in the weekend's regatta. UMass will race against 25 other schools competing in five heats, with Delaware, Marist, George Mason and Army in its heat.

The Minutewomen's Varsity 8 finished third last year while the Second Varsity 8 took fourth. UMass may struggle to repeat the success from a year ago.

"The Second Varsity 8 is expected to do very well, but the rest of the boats are a crapshoot," UMass head coach Jim Dietz said. "The Varsity 8 could really struggle."

There is a possibility of rain for Friday's action but that should not affect the Minutewomen as long as there is not a strong wind, according to Dietz.

Jeff R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu.

UMass in New Hampshire

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts track and field teams will have its first weekend off since the indoor track season. But a few of UMass's top athletes could add a few weeks to their season with a top performance in Durham, N.H., for the New England Championships, May 9-10.

The Minutemen have no representation in the field events, but have several qualifiers in track. Their deepest event is the 5,000-meter run with senior Nils Fischer along with sophomores Andrew McCann, Jonathan Pierce and Nicolai Naranjo.

McCann will also participate in the 10K. He qualified (30 minutes, 4:37 seconds) with a first-place finish at the Atlantic 10 Championships May 3-4. McCann's time qualified him for the IC4A Championships in Princeton, N.J., on May 16-17.

Sophomore Tyler Cotto (14:91 seconds) is .06 seconds away from qualifying for IC4As (14:85) in the 110-meter hurdles.

The field for this weekend will vary with schools from all over the Northeast. However, none of the Ivy League schools will be there because they have their conference championships this weekend.

Last season, the men finished 11th overall while the women came in 31st. Both teams are looking for an improved performance from last year, though much of the focus will be on advancing more athletes to next weekend's ECACs and the IC4As and the regionals.

"We want to score as many points as possible," said UMass coach Julie LaFreniere. "But coming off an intense two-day meet, I have to be careful with the [athletes] qualifying in ECACs."

Historically, this weekend features top schools from other conferences such as Boston College and Vermont.

The Minutewomen are bringing 19 athletes to participate this weekend. Senior Christina DeRosa qualified for three events but is scratched from the 10K and 1,500. She will still participate in the 5K.

"This will be her workout for the week," LaFreniere said.

DeRosa qualified for regionals in the 5K at the Larry Ellis Invitational (16:41.49) and ECACs in the 10K. LaFreniere looks for her to qualify for nationals in either race next weekend.

Redshirt junior Kirsten Bakanowski was scratched from last weekend's pole vault to concentrate more on the 4x100- and 4x400-meter relay. However, she will participate in all three events this weekend.

Bakanowski has already qualified for regionals and ECACs but she is still competing to help the Minutewomen score points this weekend.

LaFreniere is hoping for the 4x400 relay team to qualify for ECACs this weekend. It is under a second away from reaching the benchmark but was disqualified last weekend due to an improper lane change.

Another potential qualifier this weekend is sophomore Lisa Wilson. She qualified for ECACs in the discus and hammer throw but has not yet qualified in the shot put.

Wilson (43 feet, 10 inches) came within nine inches of the qualifying mark at the Larry Ellis Invitational. She has the fourth longest throw in the A-10. If she qualifies, Wilson will be the only Minutewomen to qualify for ECACs in three events.

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmill@student.umass.edu.

Looking for a Job?

The Daily Collegian

is seeking hard-working, motivated undergrads to fill our

ADVERTISING REPRESENTATIVE POSITIONS.

Excellent business experience! • Gain valuable sales experience • Get credits for work • Build your resume

SOM students strongly encouraged to apply.

TO APPLY:
Contact Dan Hurley or Brendan Cherry
@ 545-3500 for more information.

SUMMER PARKING REGULATIONS

Faculty, staff and students with valid annual lot permits are eligible to park in any of the following lots, in addition to their assigned lot, effective May 27, 2008 to August 29, 2008. Red and Blue lots continue to be restricted during the Summer.

Green Lots	Purple Lots	Yellow Lots
25	22	11
26	44	12
33	49	13
34

Anyone who wishes to purchase permits, upgrade existing permits, or park in the Campus Garage for the summer, should contact Parking Services at 413/545-0065 or visit the website at http://parking.umass.edu

Charlotte upsets No. 2 St. Bonaventure

Fordham drops St. Joe's in Game 3

By Jeff R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

The second day of the Atlantic 10 Softball Tournament began early yesterday morning with a victory by the No. 1 seed, Massachusetts, over fourth-seeded Fordham. The loss for the Rams sent them to the loser's bracket to face off in an elimination game with No. 5 Saint Joseph's.

Game 2 on the day saw the third-seed, and host, Charlotte upset No. 2 St. Bonaventure.

Game 3 later that day featured the two schools that opened the tournament on Wednesday. Fordham took the match, 1-0, in a pitcher's duel. Pitching was not the key to the rematch; Fordham's offense took control to win it, 5-1.

Charlotte vs. St. Bonaventure

Although Charlotte was the away team in the box score, it gave its home crowd a show in the first inning.

After struggling to get anything going on offense in their first tournament game, the Bonnies came out in the first inning and produced. All four of Charlotte's runs were scored in the first inning off St. Bonaventure pitcher Sherri Thompson, who gave up five hits, which included two doubles in the inning.

Leadoff hitter Sarah Melene started with a single to right field, stole second and advanced to third when freshman Whitney Williams had a bunt single down the third-base line. During the next at-bat, Williams stole second causing an error by St. Bonaventure's catcher Kara Morenus. With the error Melene came home and Williams advanced to third.

Sophomore Serena Smith drove in Williams with a single to left field, and crossed the plate on a double from Jaime West. The 49ers scored three runs off four hits before Thompson had recorded a single out.

The Bonnies would score once more before the inning on an RBI double by Emily Forbes.

Pitcher Emily Jeffery kept the Bonnies at bay the entire game. The sophomore struck out five of the first six batters she faced and retired the first nine. Jeffery allowed three hits, all singles, in her shutout performance. Not one St. Bonaventure base runner would make it past first base.

The 49ers will play Massachusetts in Game 1 of today's action; the Bonnies move into the loser's bracket with their loss.

Saint Joseph's vs. Fordham

St. Joe's would not have been happy with either team winning Game 3. The Hawks would either face the No. 1 Minutewomen or No. 4 Fordham.

The Rams got their first run of the game in the first inning, something that took them five innings to do on Wednesday. The run came off a throwing error from St. Joe's second baseman Beka Shumock.

Fordham added another run in the second inning when freshman Jocelyn Dearborn sent a home run over the right-field wall.

The lead was reduced to one when St. Joe's scored its first run on the Rams in two days. Erika Rosenwinkel reached first on a fielder's choice and would later score on a double by A-10 Player of the Year Brooke Darrell.

The Rams added three more runs in the fifth to make the Hawks chance of a comeback bleak. With one out, Fordham put together a streak of five straight hits to bring its lead to 5-1.

Starting pitcher Allison Twarowski started the streak with a single and later advanced to third on a single by Mary Beth Puccio. Both later scored on a two-run single by second baseman Allison Stotz. The catcher advanced to second on an errant throw and drove in Hawks starting pitcher from the game.

One more run crossed the plate before the Rams inning was over. St. Joe's got one more hit in the seventh but could not produce enough offense to come back.

The loss for the Hawks makes them the second team eliminated from the tournament and sends the Rams on to face second-seeded St. Bonaventure today.

Jeff R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu.

Senior Allison Twarowski has pitched Fordham to two victories in as many days. She gave up one earned run on six hits with seven strikeouts over 14 innings pitched.

Minutemen take on URI

By Eli Rosenwaike
Collegian Staff

Last year against Rhode Island, Massachusetts baseball coach Mike Stone won his 500th game as UMass's coach.

If he wants to lead his team to the Atlantic 10 Tournament for the first time in five years, he's going to need at least two more against the Rams this weekend.

The Minutemen (16-22, 9-12 A-10) currently sit in 11th place in the 14-team A-10, and need to crack the top six to reach the postseason tournament. They are two games back of St. Bonaventure for the final spot, but four teams are above them in the race.

UMass will have its chance, though. The final two series are against teams higher up in the standings; URI (fourth) and Fordham (seventh). First up are the Rams (25-21, 12-8-1 A-10), a team that has won four straight and 14 of its last 17 behind good hitting and even better pitching.

The Minutemen have their work cut out for them against ace sophomore left-hander Nick Greenwood. The southpaw hurled a complete-game shutout last time out against Saint Joseph's, striking out 13 batters while walking none. Sophomore right-hander Eric Smith wasn't bad in that series, either, fanning 11 and allowing one run in 7.1 innings.

The bullpen has been even better, with a trio of right-handers that have repeatedly shut the door in the later innings. Tim Boyce, Luke Demko and Jamie Degidio have combined for six wins, eight saves and an incredible 105-26 strikeout-to-walk ratio in 84 innings of work.

An improved UMass offense will try to counter that. Senior Ryan Franczek has broken out of his slump and is killing the ball, while four Minutemen are hitting above .300. Brian Baudinet has slowed down a bit from his scorching start but still paces the team with a .367 average.

URI is hitting better than UMass as a team (.287 to .273) but feature less of a balanced attack with two main cogs leading the way. Catcher Zach Zaneski and third baseman Shaun Hagey are both hitting .366, while no other Ram is above .300.

Mitchell Clegg and Mike Dicato will start for UMass this weekend at Bill Beck Field in Kingston, R.I., while Nick Senno, Bryan Leigh or Jared Freni will get the nod in the other game.

The Minutemen have struggled on the road this season, maintaining a 5-13 record away from home. Against teams in the conference, however, they are 5-7. URI is 11-7 on its home field.

Last season against the Rams, Stone captured his 500th win with the program winning the first game of a doubleheader on April 7. But the Minutemen fell in the second game in extra innings, blowing the save in the ninth inning on a throwing error. The final game of the series wasn't close, as the Rams hit four home runs en route to a 16-3 victory.

Eli Rosenwaike can be reached at erosenwa@dailycollegian.com.

CINEMARK

The Best Seat In Town

CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233

Schedule for Friday 5/9/2008 thru Thurs. 5/15/2008

Purchase Tickets @cinemark.com

Speed Racer (PG)*
11:05AM 1:15 2:10 4:15 5:30 7:15 8:30 10:15

What Happens In Vegas (PG-13)*
11:10AM 12:00 1:35 2:25 4:10 4:55 7:10 7:55 9:45 10:20

Iron Man (PG-13)*
11:15AM 1:05 2:15 4:05 5:15 7:05 8:15 10:00

Made of Honor (PG-13)*
11:25AM 2:00 4:45 7:25 10:05

Baby Mama (PG-13)
11:00AM 1:30 4:20 7:20 9:50

Harold & Kumar: Escape From Guantanamo Bay (R)
11:35AM 2:05 4:35 7:35 10:25

Forbidden Kingdom (PG-13)
11:10AM 4:50 10:30

Forgetting Sarah Marshall (R)
11:45AM 1:55 4:00 7:00 7:50 9:40

Young@Heart - CineArts (PG)
11:20AM 2:20 5:00 7:40 10:15

* NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVORS
TICKETS AND INFO AVAILABLE AT CINEMARK.COM

Comix

"I MAY NOT AGREE WITH YOUR OPINION, BUT I WILL SMACK YOU IN THE FACE IF YOU OPEN YOUR MOUTH AGAIN."

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

APT. FOR RENT

Center of town 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Free Ride to Church & back in Dwight Chapel Van. Be at Haigis Mall @ 10:00am or Converse Hall @ 10:20am Sundays. www.dwightchapel.org See you there!

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided 1-800-965-6520

Japanese speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments contact phonetics lab. phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

RAFT GUIDES
Zoar Outdoor is seeking adventuresome people to be full and part-time summer raft guides. Learn how to guide a raft during our training program and spend the summer on the Deerfield River. Applicants should have customer service experience and a positive attitude and be comfortable working as a team or independently. Application deadline Feb. 15th. Call 800-532-7483 or see www.zoaroutdoor.com/jobs.htm for an application.

CAMP TAKAJO
Naples, Maine. Noted for picturesque lakefront location, exceptional facalities. Mid-June thru mid-August. Counselor positions in tennis, baseball, basketball, soccer, lacrosse, golf, flag football, roller hockey, field hockey, swimming, sailing, water skiing, gymnastics, dance, horseback riding, archery, weight training, newspaper, photography, video, woodworking, ceramics/pottery, crafts, fine arts, silver jewelry, copper enamel, nature study, radio/electronics, theater, costumer, piano accompanist, music instrumentalist, backpacking, rock climbing, canoeing/kayaking, ropes course, secretarial, nanny. Call Takajo at (866) 356-2267 Submit application online at takajo.com Will be in the Campus Center Job Fair tomorrow.

Put up Posters! Through summer, car, sell, commitment needed. Up to $12/hr w/bonus. 20 hrs between Mon-Wed, excellent communicator, fast-paced, punctual, resume and formal cover letter to postering@art-spromo.org. Hiring ASAP.

THE GREATEST SUMMER OF YOUR LIFE CAMP PONTIAC is coming to UMASS! Located in NY State Camp Pontiac, a premier co-ed overnight camp in New York, is looking for fun, enthusiastic and mature individuals who can teach and assist in all areas of athletics, aquatics, the arts, or as a general bunk counselor. Interviews will be held on Thursday, Feb. 21st 9:00AM-11:30AM Campus Center/Student Union Complex-Room 901. Please email: stefanie@campponliac.com or call Stefanie at 516-626-7668 to set up an interview

French speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments. Contact the phonetics lab. phonetics_lab linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Marketing Intern As a Marketing Intern (paid position) you will assist in marketing efforts to grow sales of the leading economic policy analysis model. Responsibilities include developing presentations and other marketing material, writing for newsletters, website, and blog, and assisting with internet marketing, promotions, campaigns, and other marketing efforts. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038. resumes@remi.com. REMI is an eoe and maintains a drug-free workplace.

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment., GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe 413-548-9992 27 Pray St. Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

SERVICES

Spring Break from $199 Land price starting from $199 for 7 days. We also have an all inclusive hotel start from $799 per person. Give us a call today it's not to late to still get away 1-800-GET-SUN-1

ACROSS
1 F.D.R.'s mother
5 Big bash
9 Shopping complexes
14 Cross-examine
15 Desktop image
16 French farewell
17 Nullify
18 Shy away from 19 Pursue
20 Say again
22 Led the way
24 Warning signals
25 Cocktail party spreads
26 "Siddhartha" writer
27 Answers to posers
31 Court order
33 Bradley University city
34 Simians
38 Lead-in 40 Succeeding
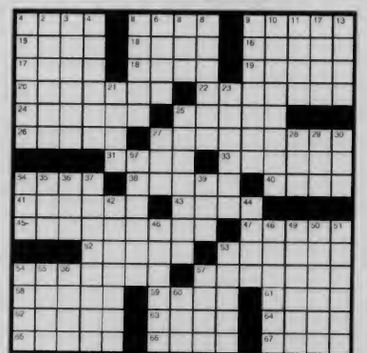
41 Begin a trek
43 Ambience
45 Blasphemous act
47 Milk purchase
52 Sweet liqueur
53 Football kicker
54 Subtlety
57 Spider woman of myth
58 Motionless
59 Uncommon
61 Good earth
62 Consonant component
63 Band bookings
64 Rounds and clips
65 Vestibule
66 Greek Cupid
67 Harts and hinds



DOWN
1 Wet shoes sound
2 Marne or Ern
3 Jockeys and straphangers
4 Islands west of Portugal
5 Central points
6 Tummy trouble
7 Gehrig or Ferrigno
8 Yearly
9 Sugarcane cutter
10 Steady attachment (to)
11 Tall tale teller
12 ___-majesty
13 Took to court
21 Freshly
23 Drunken daze
25 Thick vegetable soup
27 Gluttony, e.g.
28 Lode load
29 Give a thumbs-down to
30 Used chairs
32 Some guns
34 Four-legged loter
35 Low-tech missile?
36 Yada, yada, yada
37 Wizard
39 Bemoan
42 To begin with
44 Greenish-blue
46 Come to light
48 Nude
49 Receiving visitors
50 File menu option
51 Slight quake
53 Overhead weight lift
54 V in Latin
55 Privy to
56 Colorful salamander
57 Jason's vessel
60 Televise

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

This is the brutal box.

Draw a brutally awkward moment involving two people and a root vegetable.

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach

Summer Session 2008

KICK off your Summer right!!!

Catch up- get ahead or explore your curiosity

Session I: June 2 - July 10
Session II: July 14 - Aug 20

REGISTER NOW!
UMassULearn.net

WONDERMARK By David Malki

UMASS AMHERST
SUMMER SESSION

Don't be left in the dark!
Come see what our bloggers have to say ~

www.ulearnublog.net

Nerd.

7							6
		2	5	1	8	3
1							9
		5	6		2	9
	6						4
		7	9		4	5
5							7
		1	2	6	7	8
2							3

Quote of the Weekend

"Reality is that which, when you stop believing in it, doesn't go away."

— Philip K. Dick

Caption Contest

Winning Caption Submitted by: Tom van der Poll

This was the last caption contest of the year. Go home and cry yourself to sleep all summer long until school starts again and you can come alive with caption contests in your hearts and minds.

"...won't you flyyyyyyy-hiiiiiiiigh freeeeee biiiird yeaaaa"

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
We're all despicable beings. To despise another is to despise yourself. Hooray for reciprocity.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Here's a new flavor of bird that you should seriously consider developing: Chicken Plus.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Eat more haddock. This is the word of Almighty Cod.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Your ex is a fierce holographics pokemon of creepiness. Restraining order, I choose you.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Don't worry, they'll descend one day.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You look very sad when you try to eat the clingy pieces of muffin from the wrapper using only your face as an excavator.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You will find yourself soaking in an economy-sized vat of serendipity and good fortune.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
From here on out, it's going to get dangerous. And if you're lucky, it could get messy.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
What's all the Holub about?

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
This is the last weekend of the semester. How many different types of salted, cured meats will you eat?

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Stop trying to make sense of the filth you read on this page and just accept it as the absolute truth.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
When you talk, all the world hears are furby noises.

BLISS By Harry Bliss

"But I just joined Facebook!"

Townehouse of Amherst Condominums

Walk to Campus!
Hurry,
Get 'em before they're gone!

50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, MAY 9, 2008 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

BRIAN TELVER/COLLEGIAN

INSIDE: MINUTEWOMEN WIN TOURNEY, TO HOST REGIONAL | PAGE 10

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SHOWERS: HI: 56 LO: 40 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, MAY 12, 2008

Mass. increases '09 budget for campus

Over $24 million increase expected for upcoming year

BY HOLLY SEABURY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A five percent increase for the University of Massachusetts system was included in the state budget for fiscal year 2009.

The increase, passed in the budget that was completed on May 2, will give $24.2 million more to the five-campus system spending plan, half of which typically goes to the flagship Amherst campus. Under this House budget, funding for the five-campus system will increase from $469 million to $493.2 million.

Funding for student financial aid was increased by $3 million, from $93.8 million to $96.8 million. The House also gave $15,000 to further the possibility of establishing a system of state universities, a plan under consideration by the state colleges last year.

The dual enrollment program at public higher education institutions received $1 million.

Student Trustee-elect Lindsay McCluskey said that she is satisfied with the increase, though she and groups Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts and Massachusetts Students Uniting actually asked for a larger increase, of $17.1 million.

"I am happy with the allocation for PHENOM," said McCluskey. "But public higher education is unaffordable for many; students cannot afford a better education. Our hope is that each year the state will increase this funding and that someday, public higher education will be free in Massachusetts."

PHENOM has been lobbying legislators to work toward

See BUDGET on page 2

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

The Massachusetts state legislature completed its budget for 2009 on May 2, which included a five percent increase in funding for UMass.

Student death shakes campus

Northampton man charged in connection to alleged overdose

BY WILLIAM MCGUINNESS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A 23-year-old University of Massachusetts student died on May 8 due to what is believed to be a heroin overdose.

Darby Fassett, a Groton, Mass., native and resident of Hadley, was found unresponsive outside his home.

According to Hadley Chief of Police Dennis J. Huckowicz, police officers responded to a call at 11:52 p.m. stating that Fassett was unconscious on the ground outside of his Bay Road residence. According to court documents, police found him with four empty glassine bags marked "American Gangster," blue tablets believed to be Ecstasy and a spoon supposedly used for cooking the drug.

He was then transported to Cooley-Dickenson Hospital where he was pronounced dead upon arrival.

The Daily Hampshire Gazette reported on Saturday that police say Justin P. Morin, 20, of 20 Jackson St., second floor, Northampton, allegedly sold Fassett the heroin. Police used Fassett's cell phone to text message Morin who was arraigned in Northampton District Court on a charge of distribution of a class A substance on Thursday. He pleaded not guilty and was released on $1,000 bail. He has since been charged in connection to Fassett's death.

It was reported that Morin then communicated with Hadley police and during the interview said he gave Morin five bags of heroin for $100.

He transferred to the University in 2006 and worked as a cashier at Whole Foods Market on Russell St. in Hadley.

In an e-mail to undergraduate students, Dean of Students Jo-Anne Vanin extended the University's sympathy to Fassett's parents, family and friends.

William McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn@gmail.com.

Fassett was found unresponsive by Hadley police outside his home.

Northampton hosts bicycling rally, environment and bike safety discussed

BY AMARA ANOSIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With the price of gas reaching record highs and environmental concerns mounting, the Second Annual Bike Rodeo and Rally could not have come at a better time.

On Saturday May 10, the Northampton Cycling Club (NCC), in partnership with Northampton Area Pediatrics, hosted the rodeo and rally in Northampton.

Children and bicycle enthusiasts gathered from 12 p.m. to 3 p.m. in recognition of cyclists throughout the Pioneer valley at the Jackson Street School in Northampton. Festivities included basic cycling skills instructions, an interactive obstacle course, bicycle cleaning and tune-up stations and a performance by the Team East BMX Pro stunt group.

"We think it is important to get young people involved in cycling and to promote bike safety and physical fitness," said Michael Hempstead, president of the Northampton Cycling Club. "I think there's a misconception with non-bikers that cyclists don't belong on the roadways. People should know that cyclists have the right to operate their bikes along side cars safely."

The Bike Rodeo and Rally was a free event open to the public, with almost all attendees arriving by bicycle.

"Not only is riding a bike a convenient way to get around, but it's also very environmentally friendly," said Arrika Freeman, University of Massachusetts freshman and cyclist.

Highlighting the afternoon was the Team East BMX Pro's performance. Its two shows were filled with breathtaking stunts, while maintaining informative messages about fitness and cycling safety.

"The biggest thing is to always have safety equipment. BMX is not any easy sport to get into. It has a lot of ups and downs, but you should stick with it," said Matt Still, a member of Team East BMX Pro. "We do a lot of local events, making little kids happy."

The Northampton Cycling Club (NCC) was formed to service the vast cycling community in the Pioneer Valley of Massachusetts. With over 100 members, the NCC has grown considerably from its 1999 beginning.

A member of the NCC is entitled to discounts at several local fitness friendly stores such as, Competitive Edge, Fly Cycles and

See CYCLING on page 2

AMHERST BULLETIN/OLIVER SCOTT-SNYDER/COLLEGIAN

Amelia Defrancis (10) and Emma Hampstead (9) race for the finish line at yesterday's bike rodeo, hosted by Northampton Cycling Club. The event also included an obstacle course, bicycle lessons, cleaning and tune-up stations and a performance by the Team East BMX pro stunt group.

Headphone use leading to increasing hearing problems in children, teens

BY ADAM COULTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Formerly when the topic of hearing loss came up, the immediate image evoked would be that of an aging adult. However, loud concerts and cranked-up headphones are now changing this preconceived notion and negatively contributing to music-induced hearing loss in children and teens.

On Friday, the University of Massachusetts Amherst Communication Disorders Department sponsored "Sound Advice," a program promoting awareness of the risks of music-induced hearing loss. Those who attended had the opportunity to get their hearing tested, find out how the typical volume of their iPod was affecting their hearing future, as well as learn new ways to protect their hearing.

A few young men and women were milling around outside of the Center for Language, Speech and Hearing on North Pleasant St. while waiting for their appointment with the clinician.

"I'm not too worried about what they're going to tell me; I don't listen to my headphones really loudly," said Amherst resident Maria Fillio.

The volume at which most people typically listen to music, whether it is through headphones or live at a concert, kills the hair cells in their ears, ultimately causing hearing loss. This noise-induced hearing problem is starting to gain attention through such

See HEARING on page 2

TIC grants award to Theraputic Systems

Students receive money towards research projects

JOSHUA WALOVITCH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The third annual Technology Innovation Challenge was held at the Lincoln Campus Center of the University of Massachusetts last Thursday.

The Technology Innovation Challenge (TIC), created by Dean of College of Engineering Michael F. Malone, works towards the successful integration of management, science and engineering.

"We have had an interest in finding ways for research projects here at the University to become more mainstream in society," said Malone.

This year's winner was Therapeutic Systems, fronted by doctoral student Brian Mullen. Therapeutic Systems is a company that makes therapeutic vests and other devices that relieve people suffering from anxiety disorders. He and his team were awarded $50,000 to spend on developing their business.

Engineered Response, comprised of UMass students Brycen Spencer, Hendalee Wilson and Tom McDevitt were also awarded $15,000 for their business proposal.

Engineered Response is a company that plans to make Wireless Impact Gardiens (WIG's) that would be implemented into safety helmets. These helmets, nicknamed "The OnStar of Helmets," automatically call 911 in the event of an accident.

The TIC promotes innovation education based on technology conceived by faculty, students and alumni of UMass Amherst. This year, five teams competed for prizes that totaled up to $80,000. Much of this money was donated by alumni and friends of the University.

The competition was judged by over a dozen professionals in the fields of business and technology, including entrepreneurs, legal experts and consultants.

"We are looking for the most innovative, significant and promising projects," commented Henry Gibson, a judge from SABIC Innovative Plastics.

The TIC is comprised of two phases. Phase one takes place during the fall semester. It is a similar competition, but there are a greater number of teams participating and the projects are in the early idea stages. The advancing teams of that competition then move on to the spring semester competition and use that time to further develop their projects.

"These teams are developing very early stage ideas. Often, the way companies get started is that someone has an idea, and then all that is needed is a little money to prove it out," added Malone.

In addition to the judges choices, the audience can vote, too. Comprised of over 70 people this year, the audience voted on its favorite and most promising company and awarded Rentabilities, comprised of Alexander and Andrew Cook, $7,500 towards their company.

Rentabilities is an online store that brings rental companies into the Internet age, making it more convenient for people to rent and rent out items. It is similar to Amazon.com, but it is used for rental purposes.

Previous winners include last year's Condition Engineering, who proposed a company that would monitor and provide failure warning systems for earthen structures. Two-years ago, Pharma Solutus won with its proposal of a company that would develop drug delivery platforms for targeting cancer and making chemotherapy more effective.

Joshua Walovitch can be reached at jwalovit@student.umass.edu

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIII
Issue 138

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Katie Huston
Business Manager Dan Exter
Production Manager Chris Martin
Night Supervisor Meghan Murphy
Advertising Manager Alex Bender
Advertising Production Katherine Shea
Editorial Production Michael Sarkes
Arts & Living Editor Ryan McAskill
Copy Editor Adam Staggin
Editorial Editor S.P. Sullivan
News Editor Derrick Perkins
Sports Editor Jeremy Rice
Features Editor Dave Humphreys
Photo Editor Michael Phillis
Web Editor James Hale
Asst. Business Manager Eric Stromeak
Assistant Advertising Marwa Whooten
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Stephanie McPherson
Asst. Arts & Living Skye McIntyre
Asst. Arts & Living Brian Wood
Asst. Editorial James Mathews
Asst. Editorial Melissa Garber
Assistant News Michael King
Assistant News Kate Olesin
Assistant News Holli Seaburn
Assistant Sports Mike Connor
Assistant Sports Joe Melore
Assistant Sports Eli Rosenwinkle
Assistant photo Brian Tedder
Arts Web Editor Michelle Abbasciano
Editorial Web Editor Leif Walcutt
News Web Editor Nick Bush
Sports Web Editor Steve Games

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. It moved to daily schedule in 1967. The Collegian has been managed since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
William McGuinness

COPY EDITOR
Nichole Amaral

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

WEB EDITOR
James Hale

Budget increase expected for FY2009

BUDGET from page 1

the passing of several legislations that would go toward the Massachusetts higher education system. Such legislations include a bill to allow the state to borrow $2 billion for much-needed repairs and construction on all five university campuses, a bill that would establish a loan forgiveness program for students who meet certain criteria and a bill that would make textbook publishers cease the requirement to buy additional materials, such as CD-ROMs and workbooks, with a textbook, among other proposed bills.

Meanwhile, the Ways and Means Committee has not yet completed its financial plan but is expected to release its proposed fiscal year 2009 next week. During the week-long debate, lawmakers did not add any funds to the budget proposed by the Committee, but a number of allocations were approved, including $500,000 for the Cranberry Station at Wareham, $50,000 for 4-H and $250,000 for Future of Work initiatives at the labor centers in Amherst, Boston, Dartmouth and Lowell.

Another $368,000 was given to Gaston Institute at UMass Boston, $60,000 for the Grace Grossman Youth Collaborative at the Nantucket field station, $500,000 for Portuguese Studies at Dartmouth, $50,000 for the Center for Business Research at Dartmouth and $541,000 for the Collins Center for Public Management of the McCormack Institute in Boston.

House members succeeded in raising state employees' share of health insurance premiums. State employees currently pay 15 percent of health insurance costs.

The original proposal for the state budget was actually $27.9 billion, a 0.3 billion difference from the passed budget of $28.2; however the budget proposal for the University system was not affected.

Holly Seabury can be reached at hseabury@dailycollegian.com.

Cycling club to host local bicycle-related events

CYCLING from page 1

Webber and Grinnel. Members also have the opportunity to join local triathlon or racing teams.

Becoming a member provides benefits but requires a few steps. Those interested can do so at the NCC Web site: www.nohobike-club.org.

In addition to the rodeo on Saturday, the NCC hosts a number of community-oriented events to promote cycling, including the Tour of the Hilltowns, the UCI classified Cycle-Smart International Cyclecross Race and several children's races in Look Park.

Next up for the NCC is Bike to Work Week, which will be held beginning on May 10, lasting until May 18. This event calls for cyclists to "get off their fat gas" and to start peddling their way to work.

Amara Anosike can be reached at amara4prez@aim.com

A group takes a break from cycling to watch other bicycle events at the Bike Rodeo and Rally in Northampton on Saturday.

Hearing loss linked to more, louder portable music players programs as "Sound Advice," the new software which was introduced and integrated into such popular music devices as the iPod.

HEARING from page 1

In 2006, Apple, the makers of the iPod, unveiled a free software update that gives users the ability to set maximum volume limits on their devices.

"This can help to guide people to use their iPods in a responsible manner that may prevent permanent hearing loss," said President Gail Whitelaw PhD, on the American Academy of Audiology Web site.

Besides the overall volume of the music, the amount of time one spends listening plays a role in increased susceptibility to hearing loss. According to a 2004 study by Brian Fligor of the Children's Hospital and L. Clarke Cox of Boston University Medical Center, the cut-off amount of time for listening can be determined using the Time-Weighted Average (TWA). The TWA is the combination of the level and the duration of exposure. Another way to describe the maximum allowable TWA is "noise dose," with a 100 percent noise dose representing the highest permissible exposure.

The study recommended setting the volume of a personal stereo system at no higher than 6, with 10 being the highest level and listening for only an hour per day. This particular recommendation is for on-ear phones.

"A safe level for listening to headphones indoors, say in a relatively quiet room, should be at about 69dB," said Sandra Williams, a public relations spokesperson at Sony Electronics.

There is also a simple test that can be enacted to make sure headphone music level is not dangerous.

"With open-ear headphones, the ability to still be able to clearly hear normal conversation through the headphones is a good indicator the level is safe," said Williams.

Symptoms of hearing loss include a ringing or buzzing in the ears, difficulty understanding speech and the slight muffling of sounds. If experiencing these or other problems with hearing, it is recommended to contact an ear doctor for further assistance.

Adam Coulter can be reached at apcoulte@student.umass.edu

Myanmar aid sinks

Myanmar's monumental task of feeding and sheltering 1.5 million cyclone survivors suffered yet another blow Sunday when a boat laden with relief supplies – one of the first international shipments – sank on its way to the disaster zone.

The death toll jumped to more than 28,000 and British Foreign Secretary David Miliband warned that "malign neglect" by the isolated nation's military rulers was creating a "humanitarian catastrophe of genuinely epic proportions."

The junta has been sharply criticized for its handling of the May 3 disaster, from failing to provide adequate warnings about the pending storm to responding slowly to offers of help.

Though international assistance has started trickling in, the few foreign relief workers who have been allowed entry into Myanmar have been restricted to the largest city of Yangon. Only a handful have succeeded in getting past checkpoints into the worst-affected areas.

But in what was seen as a huge concession by the junta, the United States finally got the go-ahead to send a C-130 cargo plane packed with supplies to Yangon on Monday, with two more air shipments scheduled to land Tuesday.

Myanmar's military rulers are deeply suspicious of Washington, which has long been one of the junta's biggest critics, pointing to human rights abuses and its failure to hand over power to a democratically elected government.

"We hope that this is the beginning of a long line of assistance from the United States," White House spokesman Gordon Johndroe told reporters in Crawford, Texas over the weekend. "They're going to need our help for a long time."

Highlighting the many challenges ahead, however, a Red Cross boat carrying rice, drinking water and other goods for more than 1,000 people sank Sunday near hard-hit Bogalay town. All four aid workers on board were safe.

–Associated Press

Robot squirrel provides insight

AMHERST, Mass. — One gray squirrel, its bushy tail twitching, barked a warning as another scrounged for food nearby.

Researchers hope "Rocky" the robo-squirrel will help them learn about how animals interact with each other.

It was an ordinary spring day at Hampshire College, except that the rodent issuing the warning was powered by amps, not acorns.

Dubbed "Rocky" after the cartoon character, the robo-squirrel is working its way into Hampshire's five-squirrel clique, controlled by researchers several yards away with a laptop computer and binoculars.

Sarah Partan, an assistant professor in animal behavior at Hampshire, hopes that by capturing a close-up view of squirrels in nature, Rocky will help her team decode squirrels' communication techniques, social cues and survival instincts.

Rocky is among many robotic critters worldwide helping researchers observe animals in their natural environments rather than in labs. The research could let scientists better understand how animals work in groups, court, intimidate rivals and warn allies of danger.

In Indiana, for instance, a fake lizard shows off its machismo as researchers assess which actions intimidate and which attract real lizards. Pheromone-soaked cockroach counterfeits in Brussels, meanwhile, exert peer pressure on real roaches to move out of protective darkness. In California, a tiny video camera inside a fake female sage grouse records close-up details as it's wooed – and more – by the breed's unusually promiscuous males.

The research may even help explain similar instinctive behaviors in humans, researchers say.

"Animals and humans are all affected by behaviors, body postures and signals from each other that we may not be aware of," Partan said.

The use of fake critters to infiltrate real groups of animals is so new that few companies build or sell such tools to researchers.

Many of the scientists using animal doppelgangers have modified toy animals or, like Partan and her students, cobbled together their own with fake fur, small motors, circuits and other material. Partan, who created Rocky a few years ago with students when she taught at the University of South Florida, is constantly refining its actions and updating its technology.

Rocky's movement is controlled by basic computer programs, and it has tiny speakers inside that play recordings Partan purchased from an animal-sounds library at Cornell University.

One recent afternoon, she and students Maya Gounard, 20, and Andrew Fulmer, 19, brought Rocky out for field testing and placed him near real squirrels. Mounted on a board, he was shielded by a camouflage hood and a long cord connected him to the researchers' laptop.

After the computer's program flipped the hood open, Rocky went into a sequence of tail-flagging, barking and other motions squirrels recognize as warnings of danger.

The most successful experiments are when the real squirrels respond by "flagging" their own tail, halting their foraging to check for danger, scamper up a tree or take other actions that show they picked up on the signals, Partan said.

"We watch for a trade-off in their behavior," she said, pointing out a squirrel that jerked to its hind legs and froze, its eyes scanning the area as it heard Rocky's barks. "He gave up foraging to focus on being vigilant, so that's something we'd note as a discernible response."

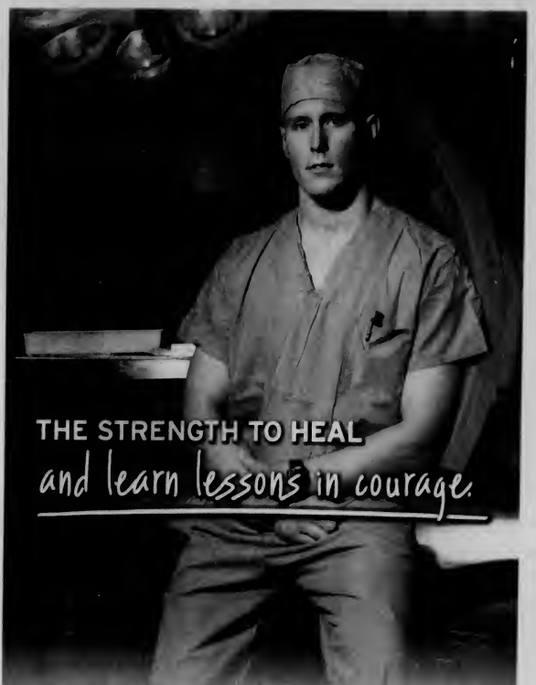
They focus on whether squirrels react more strongly to Rocky's noises or movements or a combination that researchers call multi-modal signals.

Although animal behavior has been studied for years, much remains unknown about instinctive responses.

A particular sound may be the courting equivalent of, "Come over here, you sexy beast." But a tiny change can alter the message entirely, making it something akin to, "You're about to be torn to shreds if you don't get out of my territory."

"Whether it's a bunch of squirrels in a field or humans in a mall, there are general principles of behavior that seem to hold up across species lines," said Greg Demas, director of Indiana University's Center for the Integrative Study of Animal Behavior and an associate professor of biology.

Robot critters also can help researchers discover how far a species can be pushed beyond its survival instincts.



Researchers at the Free University of Brussels, for instance, found that fake roaches doused in familiar pheromones became so accepted among their cockroach compatriots that the real bugs succumbed to the interlopers' peer pressure to move out of dark areas into the light.

In other experiments, a robotic lizard developed by Indiana University researcher Emilia Martins uses energetic push-ups to trigger similar displays of courtship, power and machismo among real lizards.

–Associated Press

Graduating?
Order a Commencement DVD
Brought to you by:
UVC TV 19
visit www.umass.edu/uvctv19 for more details
or call 413-545-1283

The pride you'll feel in being a doctor increases dramatically when you care for our Soldiers and their Families. Courage is contagious. Our Health Professions Scholarship Program (HPSP) helps you reach your goal by providing full tuition, money towards books and lab fees, a $20,000 sign-on bonus, plus a monthly stipend of more than $1,600 (more than $1,900 as of July 2008).
To learn more about the U.S. Army Health Care Team, call SFC Ronald Lizotte at 877-704-2275, email ronald.lizotte@usarec.army.mil, or visit healthcare.goarmy.com/info/mchpsp1.
©2007. Paid for by the United States Army. All rights reserved.
U.S.ARMY
ARMY STRONG.

Thursday, May 15th
9 pm to Midnight in all DCs
MIDNIGHT BUFFET
A FABULOUS MENU FEATURING:
Omelet Bar
Fresh Fruit Salad
Chicken Tenders
Dim Sum
Vegetarian Lo Mein
Chocolate Peanut Butter
Cheesecake
UMass Bottled Water
Gourmet Pizza
(including whole wheat)
Chocolate Cake
Nature Burger
Fortune Cookies
Spring Rolls
Cobb Salad
Starbucks Coffee
TAKE A BREAK FROM STUDYING AND JOIN THE CROWD FOR YOUR FAVORITE SPECIAL!
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
2007 Grand Prize
Ivy
umass.edu/diningservices

A night to remember...
WORLD STREET FOOD WITH LOCAL FLAVORS
Join us and sample food from Singapore, Thailand, Europe, and Mediterranean prepared by our award-winning Chefs. Specialty wines will be served.
MARRIOTT CENTER, 11TH FLOOR, CAMPUS CENTER
CHEF WILLIE SNG (EXECUTIVE CHEF)
CHEF CHI CUONG HUYNH (EXECUTIVE SOUS-CHEF OF CATERING)
Thursday May 15 5 to 8pm
CHEF SIMON STEVENSON (PASTRY CHEF)
ASSISTED BY JENAFER ANDRÉN (CHEF INSTRUCTOR OF HTM)
RSVP BY MONDAY, MAY 12
For reservations or more information call:
UMass Catering 413-577-1234 or e-mail fsc@mail.aux.umass.edu
Pricing: $20 in advance, $25 at the door · Proceeds go to HTM Scholarship Fund
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
Eisenberg
Ivy
Co-hosted by UMass Catering and Department of Hospitality and Tourism Management
Sponsored by: Great Wall Restaurant, Angy's Food Products, Phantom Foods, Joe Czajkowski's Farm, MS Walker, North Coast Seafoods, UMass Auxiliary Services.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, MAY 12, 2008

"If all printers were determined not to print anything till they were sure it would offend nobody, there would be very little printed."- Benjamin Franklin

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Student, veteran, hero

Brad DeFlumeri

When I first came to UMass from the active-duty Navy in January of 2007, I was immediately struck by the relatively-poor resources on campus for veterans. From the inept transfer "orientation," to the endless arguments with financial aid over my veteran status, to the cold treatment by the housing assignments office, my transition from the military to the UMass community was anything but smooth.

Within my first week as a student, I was contacted by the co-founder of a veterans' organization on campus who was extremely interested in helping me voice some of my concerns to the former Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, Mike Gargano.

That supportive student was fellow serviceman, Iraq War combat veteran, Army Reservist, unyielding force behind the establishment of the Military Community Resource Center and current President of the Veterans and Service Members Association (VASMA), Jon Zagami.

Zagami is graduating this month after four years as a UMass student – four years as a crusading activist, friend, mentor and supporter of the UMass veterans' community.

To so many of us in this small but tightly-knit community, Zagami is nothing short of a hero: ready, willing and able to speak up on our behalf when members of the administration are hiding under their desks avoiding an issue or when the SGA is too busy funneling money into the pockets of their friends and cronies to help out a severely under-funded VASMA.

Zagami, along with fellow veteran Jon Schnauber, founded VASMA two years ago to assist veterans, service-members and their families here at UMass. According to its Web site, "the mission of VASMA is to establish a long-standing organization, which will help to facilitate the transition between military and academic environments through a support network of veterans and service members helping each other, while providing information about appropriate services and resources to those in need."

To so many of us in the UMass veterans community, Jon is a nothing short of a hero.

As President of VASMA for the last year, Jon Zagami was instrumental in the battle to establish a military resource office organized under the Center for Student Development (CSD). Toward this noble end, Zagami, after sensing the need for an additional veterans office on campus to take some of the burden off of veterans officer and Assistant Dean of Students Eileen Stewart, took his case to Beacon Hill last summer, urging legislators to look into why this campus' resources for veterans paled in comparison to those of UMass Boston and other UMass system campuses.

After much give-and-take with administrators and SGA leadership, the product of Jon's valiant efforts was the creation of the Military Community Resource Center (MCRC) organized under long-time veterans supporter and student affairs events coordinator Judy Gagnon.

The MCRC currently exists as a sort of pre-agency under the CSD, directly accountable to Associate Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Byron Bullock. Its mission is generally similar to VASMA's in that it seeks to ensure a smooth transition from the military to academia for UMass veterans.

When some veterans fall through the cracks or become increasingly frustrated with the bureaucratic jump rope that is often necessary to get anything done in Whitmore, these two fine organizations are now right there, ready to support the veterans community.

Four years ago, veterans matriculating at UMass had a very small support network that consisted of little more than an office where they could go to ask why their benefit payments were always late.

One honorable young man, American hero and tireless veterans advocate saw this and set out to do something about it. He was determined to make this campus more friendly and responsive to our finest men and women. As a consequence of this relentless drive to help his brothers and sisters in arms, veterans on campus now have their own RSO and their own support agency.

Future generations of UMass veterans will not have to feel like they are making the long and uncertain journey from battlefield to academia by themselves without anyone to lean on.

Jon Zagami, much more than any other single person, is responsible for this. As the veterans community bids him farewell and wishes him the best of luck after graduation, we rest comfortably in knowing that our once unfriendly campus feels a little more like a home because of his determination to never take no for an answer and his persistence to do right by those who have served our great nation.

On May 24, this school will say goodbye to thousands of fine and upstanding men and women whose contributions to the UMass community are appreciated. One of them, however, has left an incomparable legacy at this school and accomplished so much that future generations of students will greatly benefit from his selfless advocacy and concern for others. For this and so much else, Jon Zagami is indeed a hero, and it pains me to have to say goodbye to him.

Brad DeFlumeri is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bdeflume@student.umass.edu and will be featured tonight on Sweet Baby Lou & the Reverends of Funk on WMUA from 12-2 a.m.

Ed/Op double feature: the grass at UMass

The revolution will be fertilized

Matt Morin

UMass is an economy all to itself. We have a balance of trade with the larger Massachusetts economy (in debt), we have class stratification (administration, teachers, students and workers), and we even have an industrial sector, with the new heating plant coming online. In fact, we have everything you would need for a proper capitalist system, and perhaps nothing exemplifies this more then our agricultural sector.

Now I know what you must be thinking: you've never seen any crops being grown on campus before. Well, these crops are especially low to the ground, as they aren't meant to seem like a crop at all. If you look closely, however, you will see that almost all of our unpaved space is covered with the same tired mono-culture: grass.

This plant is the pride and joy of this institution, evidenced by the obsessive care it receives. Those little yellow flags everywhere that let you know pesticides have just been sprayed, well, those just go to show you that grass is unbelievably more important than the health and environmental problems associated with spraying poison on 80 percent of the campus. If you look closely, you can notice that it is planting season now, as the earth has been loosened and Monsanto's finest broadcast every which way. Soon, there will be a small army of harvesters, cutting this grand crop, not for food or for profit or for people but just for the glory of this beautiful plant.

Who doesn't want a kiwi and strawberry covered Student Union?

Now perhaps you think my sarcasm is a bit extreme. They are, after all, just lawns. But lawns are a serious environmental problem, using ten times as many chemicals than actual industrial farming. This goes on to pollute our air soil and water. The emissions out of just one power mower, operated for one hour, are equal to those of a car driven 350 miles. This is all for a plant that is purely aesthetic.

But how aesthetically pleasing is our campus really? Is all this pollution and upkeep really getting us anywhere? I don't think we need to take a poll here. It's an obvious fact – UMass is not easy on the eyes. And while most people would attribute this to the buildings, I would argue that the landscaping has a lot to do with it as well. It's not that the grass is ugly, but that it is too insignificant to really take one's attention away from the buildings. We have a few trees here; it is true. But compared to most schools, we are a barren campus. And it's not just a lack of trees that makes it barren but the lack of anything besides grass and trees. Luckily, as a University, we have committed ourselves to carbon neutrality – officially – meaning that at some point in time, this basic feature of our campus, of intensive lawn maintenance, will have to change. The question I would like to pose is, how about next semester?

I mean it. This is very possible. Environmentalists across campus are uniting in coalition to accomplish this task. And this is a vital one. The Campus Landscape Improvement Plan (CLIP) was drafted with little faculty input and absolutely no student input. As the principle users of this campus, we should have the most say in these decisions, not the least.

This coalition of environmentalists, called the Eco-Coalition, is here to work towards carbon neutrality, but it is costly and politically difficult to get the funding for solar panels and wind turbines and all the upper-scale solutions the environmental movement has concocted. Yet a radical campus landscape plan could do just as much as these other things. The key is to make our landscape multi-functional and to reduce our carbon footprint in a number of different ways with each plant.

Don't just have plants for aesthetics. Have plants for things like producing food and insulating buildings. My favorite example is putting Hardy Kiwi vines (yes, they will grow here) on a few buildings, drastically reducing the need for air conditioning in the summer and providing a better source of vitamin C than oranges, which incidentally are shipped in diesel refrigerator trucks from Florida. If we put more perennial crops in areas that don't need lawn care (because they are never walked on), we could sequester our carbon, localize our food system and discontinue the incredibly-polluting process of lawn maintenance.

We may not be able to convince Whitmore to give us money for solar paneling on every rooftop, but perhaps we can convince them of strawberries instead. Green roofs are another example of this multi-functionality. They aren't just aesthetically pleasing, but they also cool the building in the summer and insulate it in the winter. Who doesn't want a kiwi and strawberry-covered Student Union?

Well, maybe we don't need to cover it, but the Eco-Coalition is in the proposal stage of redesigning the lawn in back of the Student Union, entirely remaking it into an eco-system of edible plants.

Whether we get permission to do this project or not, we need to organize a powerful campaign for carbon neutrality for our future survival if for no other reason. Yet retaking the campus presents a particular opportunity that is far more feasible for student activism.

We struck last semester, among other things, for control over student spaces. Sustainably redesigning this campus is exactly the sort of control we should have and need to have.

Matt Morin is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mmorin@student.umass.edu

An issue that cannot be 'ducked'

Lauren Rockoff

Ducks can't read. And a lot of college students don't bother to either. When walking across campus with friends, searching for the perfect place for a game of ultimate frisbee, soccer or muggle quidditch, little yellow signs are hardly on our radar. But perhaps they should be.

RSO's like to hold rallies and other events on the grassy area in front of the Student Union. Students enjoy sitting in the grass there with friends between classes. Some people prefer the squishier, softer feel of the grass beneath their feet over walking on hard concrete, as they head to the People's Market or wherever.

All of these people want to use the grass, and a seemingly silly sign isn't going to stop them. The laws only mandate that areas where pesticide has been applied must be marked with tiny yellow signs on itty-bitty white sticks. But that's clearly not working. If no one is taking the signs seriously, then there's really no point. Their purpose is defeated, and the fact that the University is following EPA and state notification guidelines does not matter if their adherence fails to prevent people (and animals) from coming in contact with potentially-harmful chemicals.

According to landscape services, there have yet to be any instances of "duck mortality," but why be cautious?

Unfortunately, though they may be effective at keeping away tiny critters bent on nibbling crops, or – in the case of UMass lawns – preventing the germination of crab grass seeds. Pesticides are chemicals, and chemicals can have all kinds of effects on ecosystems.

The pesticides used on UMass grass are actually pre-emergence crabgrass herbicides. They serve no function except to prevent the growth of unfortunate, dry-looking turf invaders.

And as most Americans know, our country is obsessed with good-looking grass. So, the fact that siduron – the most effective type of pre-emergence herbicide – is classified as a "potential ground water contaminant" is ignored.

Even if the herbicide is not applied to the immediate area surrounding the campus pond – which it is not – there is the possibility for contamination. And ducks looking for a place to hatch their cute and tiny babies undoubtedly stray into areas that they deem safe, though pesticides may make the safety they imagine impossible.

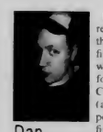
Knowing all of this, UMass landscape services has looked into alternatives to pesticides. Having had a great deal of success with a salt alternative used in the winter – the brown sticky stuff applied to all paved services to increase traction – they hoped to find an another ecologically-friendly option that could end the crabgrass problem without dangerous chemicals.

That brown sticky stuff, by the way, is actually a product known as Ice Ban Magic or Ice B'Gone. It is made from a mixture of magnesium chloride and a brewery by-product. The University uses Ice B'Gone in place of salt because after melting the ice, the salt is then washed away into bodies of water. This, in turn, has detrimental effects on plants and animals that live in and around the water.

The conclusion that landscape services has come to, however, is that there really is no known effective alternative to pesticides like there is for spreading salt.

One proposed natural pre-emergence herbicide is corn gluten meal. Though it is able to prevent crabgrass from growing while not affecting the desired grass negatively, it has its problems as well. Corn gluten meal is not easily spread across lawns and tends not to work as effectively because it does not reach the root of all the crabgrass.

Fish, squirrels, ducks, geese and other birds aren't reading these signs, and they aren't asking for a habitat without crabgrass. All of the UMass students I know could not care less about the presence of crabgrass on their campus. But there are those who believe that lush, green lawns are essential, even at the potential risk of students and our campus wildlife.



According to landscape services, there have yet to be any instances of "duck mortality," but why be cautious? No one really thought that tobacco was all that harmful when it was first introduced or that radioactive materials were worth avoiding. Why should we think twice about spraying nature with a coat of chemicals, if we haven't yet come across a double-beaked duck or three-eyed fish?

If I've learned anything from Biology of Social Issues, it's that applying something classified as one of the "least dangerous" of the common pesticides is far from the safety of "not at all dangerous." And I just really don't see the point.

Which is more important to you: a crabgrass-free UMass or healthy ducks ... and students? Luckily, this decision is completely up to people other than us – the students – unless we decide to get involved.

Lauren Rockoff is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lrockoff@student.umass.edu.

Not your father's senior column

Dan Nicastro

It's a bit surreal to know that this is the final column I will ever write for the Daily Collegian (and quite possibly the final column I will ever write). As I prepare to transition from the warm light of college's relatively-easy life into the cruel, cold reality of the world, I've found myself sifting through the memories of my college career to try and sort out the blur of the last four years.

Unfortunately, this just made me depressed and further reminded me that I still don't have a real job.

Therefore, I'm not going to use my remaining 750 words to talk about my last four years of college. Instead, I want to look forward and try and imagine what things will look like ten years from now.

The month of May 2018 will mark a political transition. After eight years of presidential antics by the cyborg Baracilly Clinbama (created by DNC Chairman Howard Dean in July of 2008 to create the ultimate super delegate to finish the presidential primary once and for all), the Republicans will once again have a chance to seize the White House.

Trying to capitalize on the long American tradition of nepotism, Jenna Bush will be hard at work, preparing for the November election as the Republican nominee for president. Unfortunately, her candidacy will be rife with problems as her father will be so bored that he will continually show up to campaign events solely to tell morbidly embarrassing stories about his daughter.

More locally, UMass will continue to update the 155-year-old campus by demolishing every building erected since 1985. In order to pacify displaced students and annoyed faculty, the University will label these building initiatives "Even Newer Dirt." The "New Dirt" used to construct these doomed buildings originally will not be discarded, but will instead be used to fill a small portion of the millions of potholes around campus.

Despite the cost of construction, UMass will stick to its promise to increase tuition under the rate of inflation. This, of course, will be a pretty easy promise to keep when the rate of inflation reaches 17 percent in 2018 (down from 25 percent in 2012). Because of the commitment to keeping tuition under the rate of inflation, the University will need to make up for lost revenue by increasing fees across the board. Student health insurance will double, room charges will skyrocket and a meal plan will become a luxury to be enjoyed by only the wealthiest of students. Luckily, not all fees will be particularly taxing, as student support for MASSPIRG will still only cost $11 (a fee that will still be waive-able).

I'm not going to use my remaining 750 words to talk about my last four years of college.

Finally, the death of print media will lead the Daily Collegian to transition from a print daily to the world of online publishing. Banking on the success of Amazon's "Kindle," the Blackberry and the Apple iMogul (introduced in 2013 to corner the news distribution market), the Collegian will try and reform the style of the paper to cater to the interactivity of these devices.

By 2018, the Collegian's editors will have realized that most people only accidentally read articles as they're searching for the crossword puzzle or the Sudoku. With this in mind, the entire electronic Collegian will be an interactive crossword puzzle/Sudoku with articles and columns embedded within the clues.

So there you have it: a future filled with a member of the Bush family seeking power, never-ending construction at UMass, rising college fees and the death of print media. My outlandish predictions may never come to fruition, but it's good to think about the future every now and again (just as a heads up: if you want to think about "my" future and are keen on hiring a UMass Amherst graduate with a degree in political science who has written for New England's largest college daily newspaper for three years, my e-mail address is at the bottom of this column).

I made a promise to an editor of mine that I would not write a column that was 850 words of "shout-outs." With apologies to Sean, I feel the need to acknowledge a few people. Thanks to everyone who has ever read my column (even if you just got lost on the way to the crossword puzzle) or those who gave me ideas for columns or my close friends who listened to me whine about having to write a column every week. Finally, thanks to my mom for always reading my work and listening patiently to me freak out about not having a topic three hours before my deadline.

Oh, and Zach Patten: you've been mentioned in a column.

So, good luck to all the graduating seniors and to those who will hold down the fort here in Amherst. I'll be back to visit.

Dan Nicastro is a fine prospect: punctual, hard working, great to have a beer with. He can be reached at dnicastro@student.umass.edu.

Ed/Op. Get your two cents in. [illegible]@dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, MAY 12, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Fencing at UMass: one student's story

By Caitlin Coughlan
Collegian Staff

The first order of business before practice begins is to roll up the pads in Boyden's wrestling room. The team works together to push the two large mats across the room and rest them along the far walls. A good hand washing and a couple of laps around the room later, the team gets warmed up with stretches and footwork then splits off to its individual groups of novices, foilists, epeeists and sabrists. The novices are taught their teammates while everyone else gets suited up in and begin to fence.

Alyson Cotton started fencing at Westford Fencing Club in 9th grade and liked the individual aspect of the sport because, she said "in fencing, if I screwed up, the only one blaming me is me." When choosing colleges "I made sure that the colleges I applied to all had fencing programs."

Her weapon is called an Epee, one that is a descendent of the rapier or what you see the Three Musketeers use. With the Epee, one can hit his opponent on any part of the body, but the catch is that if both you and your opponent get hit at the same time, both get a point or touch. With the other two weapons, foil and sabre, only one opponent can get a touch at a time, while only being able to hit certain areas on the body.

"I really like Epee because it does not have right of way, and it is all about point control. People say that Epee is really easy because you can hit the entire body, but it's not because even though the entire body is a target, you really go for the wrist, the arm and right here [points to her collarbone and chest area]," said Cotton.

At UMass, fencers must take a novice program to see what fencing they know and where they can improve by attending two two-hour practices per week for eight weeks. After finishing the program, you can join the varsity team.

"I enjoy it," said Cotton about becoming apart of the team. "I have made a lot of close acquaintances, and I enjoy hanging out with them.

"When I first started fencing novice, they were really intimidating. But once you get to know them, it's kind of like you can just brush it off, and they're ok. Novices shouldn't be scared away. The whole novice practice is a tough experience. It's not a bad experience, but they do strain you. They push you, and you're just going to have to get used to it because it is definitely worth it," said Cotton.

The most difficult part about being on the UMass fencing team said Cotton "is probably practice from 7 to 10 p.m. three nights a week. Not that I mind it because you need all that practice time to get good. It's not like you can do an hour a day or an hour two days a week and get good. It doesn't work that way; you do need all that practice time."

Cotton only participated in one competition prior to joining the UMass team and said she doesn't mind representing UMass. "Although I'm fencing for a team and on the Epee squad, it was still an individual thing."

At the team's year-end banquet, Cotton was awarded Most Improved Fencer and will be the team's treasurer next year. She has her eyes set on fencing for three more years and looks forward to the possibility of becoming an Epee captain.

Caitlin Coughlan can be reached at ccoughlan@student.umass.edu

UMass student and fencing team member Kevin Shanahan (left) attacks peer Stewart Dougherty with a fleche move. The fencing team members devote nine hours a week to practicing their sport in addition to time logged at competitions.

Alyson Cotton (left) and Lauren Murphy work on point control. The fencing team utilizes three weapons, the foil, sabre and epee. Each instrument carries different rules of play.

GTA4: gaming supremacy

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

Being a criminal shouldn't be this fun.

Nor should it cost you $60, take up all of your time or fail you out of school.

But if those things don't bother you, go right ahead and pick up Grand Theft Auto IV much to the chagrin of your overbearing parents and of every single activist group in the country that complains about what goes on in these games. PETA is the only group that hasn't yet, but just wait, it's sure to come soon enough.

Here's someone who won't complain, though: myself, and every other person who ever plays or simply lays eyes on this game. Because, quite simply, it's the best game ever made.

It makes the first three games in the series look like garbage, which is a bold statement considering how good they each were. It could be argued that not only is GTA IV the greatest single-player game ever made but one of the better multiplayer games as well.

GTA IV has it all: great graphics, a gripping storyline, incredibly-addictive gameplay and amazing online game modes. The single-player game will take approximately 40 hours to complete – and that's if you don't screw around (literally and figuratively) and stick solely to the missions. That, combined with the fantastic multi-player (there are over 10 different online games you can play) make this game original and playable for years on end.

Everyone who has played GTA knows how fun it is. But one of the things that makes this game so special is the storyline. You play as Niko Bellic, a foreigner who comes to America searching for an end to his crooked ways, a new start and the American Dream.

Niko's cousin, Roman, promises him money, expensive cars, girls and the perfect mansion with the white picket fence.

Well, not so much. Immediately, Niko finds out that it was all a lie, and he gets involved with organized crime again – robbing banks, performing hits and committing just about every crime imaginable for the mafia for himself and for other shady characters.

We later learn that Niko is really looking for someone in Liberty City (which is based on New York and looks and feels just like it), but I won't spoil who that person is. Find out for yourself. Trust me, it's worth it.

As an objective reporter, I'm looking for something negative to say about this game. I have nothing. The only downfall I can see is that Niko is an awful driver, making it difficult to navigate the city when the cops and SWAT Teams are chasing after you. But he's supposed to be a bad driver, and it just makes the game – which is extremely tough, as it is – even more challenging.

Speaking of getting away from the police, GTA IV provides a new-and-improved method for evading them and ducking out of trouble. The six-star system remains, but once in trouble, all you must do is drive out of their jurisdiction.

The new shooting system, and you will be shooting a lot, is vastly improved. The gun locks onto the targets seamlessly, and the new "duck and shoot" animation allows you to take cover when in the midst of a classic shootout with police or other gangsters.

I guess what makes this game so great are the little things: the reactions from people when you steal their cars, Niko's accent and bad-ass attitude, leaving the bars drunk after a date, stumbling around and the new cell phone feature that really adds to the gameplay.

There are some great titles out there in video game history: Zelda, Mario Kart, Golden Eye, Halo II, Call of Duty 4, Resident Evil 2, Metal Gear Solid and many others. This game takes an AK47 and pretty much destroys all of them.

The disclaimer on the game says the following: Intense Violence, Blood, Strong Language, Strong Sexual Content, Partial Nudity, Use of Drugs and Alcohol.

Now, that's the American Dream.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com

Bob Marley's legacy lives on through his bandmates

By Nick Bush
Collegian Staff

Bob Marley still dead. The Wailers, however, are quite alive. The remaining members of Marley's band made sure this fact was far from lost on the approximately 200 audience members in attendance at the Pearl Street Ballroom in Northampton last Wednesday.

Although the Wailers existed in various forms since their creation in 1963, Bob Marley and his band had little success outside of Jamaica until the early 1970's. It was then that Marley first teamed up with Aston "Familyman" Barrett and his brother Carlton Barrett. As Marley's musical director, Familyman was behind the unique sound of the Wailers, both on stage and in the studio. He recruited and trained all of the musicians that played on stage with Marley, from the horn players down to the backup singers.

Despite Marley's death in 1981, Familyman and the Wailers continued the legacy of their front man. While it would be impossible to replace the inimitable Marley, the current Wailers still manage to pack a lot of energy into performances. Lead singer Elan Attias, who channels much of Marley's influential style and message of unity and love, now fills the difficult vocal 'shoes' of Marley.

Passafire, a four-person reggae-rock outfit hailing from Savannah, GA, opened the show. Clearly indebted to Bradley Nowell and the rest of Sublime, the band pushed through over half a dozen effects-laden songs, getting the crowd mildly aroused.

As the Wailers prepared to perform, the smoky haze near the front of the stage seemed to suggest that a burning building was nearby, but nonetheless that was not the case.

Familyman emerged to loud applause with the rest of the Wailers in tow. Quickly launching into a saxophone and trumpet-fueled introductory groove, things got off to an anti-climatic start, with lead singer Attias nowhere to be found.

After nearly ten minutes of jamming, vocals began to float into the mix, and Attias stormed onto the stage dressed in a camouflaged military-style jacket.

Familyman had an intriguing presence on stage. Despite his immediately-noticeable diminutive size, he seemed to exude power from his position behind Attias next to the drum kit. With a dark beard, colorful clothing and golden aviators covering his frozen expression, it was clear whom the rest of the band was watching for essential cues.

The crowd began to groove as the Wailers rolled out a seemingly-endless array of Marley-era pseudo-covers. "Crazy Baldheads" featured Attias ripping off his camouflaged coat, revealing a "Jamaican Rebel" T-shirt.

Next up was a medley of "Stir It Up" and "Is This Love," two mid-tempo songs that nonetheless fired up the crowd of mainly college-aged students, who chanted along with Attias during most of the songs.

Although the Wailers did not have Matisyahu joining them for "No Woman, No Cry," as they did at the Tangerado Festival last month, it still was a rousingly-successful rendition. At its completion, Familyman's bass line led into the set's final song, "Jammin," which the band powered through effortlessly.

Only Attias and the band's guitarist initially returned on stage for the encore, with the two attempting a muted version of "Redemption Song." This version seemed to lack the soul of the original, however, despite the song being a clear fan favorite. On the whole, Attias did a stand-up job filling in for Marley, a difficult task for any individual.

The rest of the Wailers reemerged for "Exodus," which ultimately evolved into a 15-minute version of the song from the 1976 album of the same name. Attias used the extended jam to provide an introduction to the various band members, with each responding with a lengthy solo. Unsurprisingly, the largest crowd reaction was indeed for Familyman, who laid down a truly funky bass solo.

With the end of "Punky Reggae Party," the band walked off stage, leaving some (most likely inebriated) members of the audience audibly displeased with the short performance. However, a large majority seemed content with what it saw. Traveling all the way from Jamaica, they came, they wailed and they proved that they are far more than just Marley's old musicians.

Nick Bush can be reached at nbush@student.umass.edu.

Grand Theft Auto IV has it all: great graphics, a gripping storyline, incredibly addictive gameplay and amazing online game modes. There's enough violence and sexual content to please any college student.

Video games encourage the real thing

By John Banelis
Collegian Correspondent

Real musicians use toy guitars. Or at least they do now.

Video games Rock Band, developed by Harmonix Music Systems, and Guitar Hero, formerly of Harmonix and now Neversoft, have become a mainstay of today's music culture. Using plastic guitars in Guitar Hero as well as plastic drum kits and a microphone in Rock Band, players young and old have caught onto the phenomenon and, in their own way, exposed themselves to the lives of rock stars.

The first edition of Guitar Hero was released in November 2005 for the PlayStation 2 video game console and became a surprise hit. Critics praised the game's soundtrack and ease of play for even beginner gamers, and players loved its party nature. Rock Band was released in November 2007 and has become even more of a hit than its predecessor.

Some players have taken the rocking a step farther. On the Xbox Live online gaming service, RockBand.com and GuitarHero.com player forums, gamers have come out to share their stories.

Travis Smith, 20, a student at the University of Manitoba in Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada, has started playing actual drums because of his experience with Rock Band.

"My particular way of learning involves setting up a real drum kit in front of my Rock Band game and following along with the drum part on a real kit," said Smith.

Video games such as Guitar Hero and Rock Band allow players to live out their dreams both on-screen and in reality. Increasingly, players are picking up real instruments after playing them.

He does this by using the practice mode for drums in Rock Band in which a music sheet for the drums appears with different colors representing different drum heads. If a red note crosses the screen, he should hit the snare drum, if green, the crash cymbal, if orange, the kick pedal for the bass drum. Smith has posted two examples of his playing on YouTube.com.

"Several people have commented saying that I've skipped a good six months to a year's worth of lessons involving everything from how to properly hold the sticks to mastering some fairly complex beats," said Smith.

Smith is not alone. Brian Sobb, 32, of Toledo, Ohio has also picked up drums. He has been playing for a few months now, and said, "My Rock Band experience helped me in my limb coordination."

When he finally decided to buy a drum kit, he was teased.

"The guys in the drum shop thought it was silly that I decided to get into drumming because of a video game," he said.

Silly as it may be, there is no denying the influence of these two games. Every week, Rock Band releases downloadable content, new songs that players can add to their library. Harmonix recently announced sales of over six-million songs since its launch, just five months ago.

Neversoft has had similar success with Guitar Hero III, despite a smaller available library. They have announced sales of more than five-million songs.

"I have a deep, newfound respect for classic rock, punk and metal artists. I had no idea of the extreme technical expertise of a drummer like Neil Peart (of the band Rush). I knew he was good but wow," said Sobb.

The music industry has been looking for its saving grace, and it may be onto something. MTV Games, publisher of Rock Band, heavily promoted the game before its release with a tour bus that made stops at college campuses across America.

Guitar makers Fender and Gibson have latched onto the game's success as well. The guitar controllers made for the Guitar Hero series are modeled after Gibson guitars, and Rock Band modeled its guitar after the Fender Stratocaster. Logos on the drum sticks bundled with Rock Band bear the logo of Ludwig-Musser, a drum company.

When people decide to pick up an instrument after playing Rock Band and Guitar Hero, they may remember the brand names associated with the games.

Roger Tarin, 20, of El Paso, Texas, noticed this trend, saying, "That's probably why Fender and Gibson are some of the big sponsors, mainly because people like the game, and they'll probably be attracted to a real instrument and will go after a (Gibson) Les Paul or Fender Stratocaster."

Kharaun Campbell, 30, of Alabama has played guitar for over 12 years, and was immediately attracted to the Guitar Hero series. While older players may attempt to learn instruments on their own, parents are encouraging their children to take lessons.

Campbell already had experience with a guitar. His nine-year-old son now wants to learn to play.

"After inquiring around town about private lessons, teachers have said there has been an influx of requests for youngsters. They did not quite understand why. I informed them about the popularity of [Guitar Hero], and they then understood," said Campbell.

Roman Perez, 23, of San Leandro, Calif., decided to take drum lessons. Both he and his teacher believe Rock Band has given him a head start.

"My teacher says that I already have great timing. He even had me play using both the snare and bass drum towards the end. From what it sounded, he usually waits a bit before getting into that but said since I was doing so well that I was ready for it," said Perez.

"I have always thought I would be a good drummer. I have wanted to learn to play for a while but never really thought about it seriously until I started playing Rock Band," said Perez.

The next Jimi Hendrix, Neil Peart, Robert Plant or even Flea may accredit his start in music to a plastic guitar, set of rubber drum pads or USB microphone.

John Banelis can be reached at jbanelis@student.umass.edu.

Art project hopes to revitalize Holyoke

By Ian Nelson
Collegian Staff

Last month's University Gallery sponsored by the Public Art Symposium acted as a facilitator and brought artistic minds who work in the public spectrum together to share their national and international projects.

However, one of the panelists, Frank Sleegers, plans to bring his non-profit Hafensafari project from the harbors of Hamburg to Massachusetts' own Holyoke. Sleegers, who has lectured at UMass for the past two-and-a-half years, thinks this location would work because of "structural similarities" between the two sites, though Holyoke is far from a port.

Hafensafari, which began in the summer of 2003, is essentially a revitalization of Hamburg's abandoned and contaminated industrial sites and brings together local artists and citizens to create within a communal environment, showcasing their works in the context of a multimedia walking tour.

In the five summers since its inception, Hafensafari has grown from a two-week to four-week event, and funding has increased to $10,000. The project consists of two miles of walking tours per summer, ranging from sculpture installations and rooftop gardens to walking DJ sets and large scale projections "using strong [industrial] surfaces and edges to draw an ephemeral picture."

"We haven't changed fundamentally," Sleegers said, "but we have built on the strengths, highlighting special aspects."

He works to find what is successful and to keep that interest going from year to year, though the project will not run this summer.

"To be realistic, you've got to have a break," Sleegers said. "It's not over by any means, and there are plans for the future. The team has to rest; I've had no vacation for five years because of working on these projects."

More recent events have included songwriting contests, children's sections and a botanic aspect, working with overgrown, contaminated sites to turn them into artistic expressions.

"The mix of mediums means a bigger turnout," Sleegers said. "Younger people are attracted to the music at night, though it's not totally youth-oriented. Local families and senior citizens attend as well."

The initial project took off quickly, taking approximately six to seven months from start to production. The first Hafensafari in 2003 was less of an outside project, with the core members doing most of the work.

"It was fun," Sleegers said, for he "actually got to do some architectural work" for the tour instead of manning the organization aspect.

The idea of bringing the Hafensafari to Holyoke is a new idea, only a few weeks old, though Sleegers plans on fulfilling the notion. The center of this project would be Holyoke's hotly-debated canal. There has been much discussion on this topic, locals know about it, and "conflict makes a good product," according to Sleegers. Though he has no connections to Holyoke, Sleegers plans on getting fellow UMass architecture faculty member Joseph Krupczynski aboard, who has done work in Holyoke.

Sleegers hopes to get the University involved, a concept he finds both challenging and rewarding. He intends to employ not only visual artists for this campaign, but he also wants to branch out to creative writers, adding a new dimension to the venture. In addition to utilizing student artwork, Sleegers is looking to reference back to the localization of the Hamburg project by "encouraging people close to the site already to get involved, to expose a whole range of refreshing ideas."

"For Hafensafari, we select the artists by jury," Sleegers said, paring down 60 submissions to 15 finalists. "In the U.S., we're willing to take whatever we can get and get as much work as possible. No competition, no jury, just as many interpretations of the space [of the canal] as possible."

"The strategy," Sleegers said, "is to bring people to a place where they are experts, who are important on a major level, who can talk to local people and become familiar with the space as well as the artists."

One challenge is to create a network, teaming up with art students, landscape architecture and regional planning faculty from the University. Holyoke locals and even Hafensafari members from Germany in order to discuss how this all will work.

Another challenge? Coming up with a name. Hafensafari literally means "harbor tour." One idea Sleegers had was "Urbansafari," a walk through a bustling city environment, though he is open to suggestions.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu.

NOW OFFERING Cash for Books Prepaid MasterCard†1

CASH FOR BOOKS

We're buying your books back at these convenient locations:

Textbook Annex
Monday - Wednesday, May 12 - 14
9am – 4pm
Thursday – Friday, May 15 – 16
9am – 5pm
Saturday, May 17
11am – 4pm
Monday - Wednesday, May 19 - 21
9am – 5pm
Thursday, May 22
9am – 4pm

Campus Center- Concourse
Monday - Wednesday, May 12 - 14
9am – 4pm
Thursday – Friday, May 15 – 16
9am – 5pm
Saturday, May 17
11am – 4pm
Monday - Wednesday, May 19 - 21
9am – 5pm
Thursday, May 22
9am – 2pm

Southwest- Hampden Lobby
Thursday – Friday, May 15 - 16
10am – 5pm
Monday - Wednesday, May 19 - 21
10am – 5pm
Thursday, May 22
10am – 1pm

UMASS AMHERST University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413-545-2619

efollett.com ONLINE. ON CAMPUS.

790

STUDENT RELAXES FOR ELEVEN STRAIGHT MINUTES!
NAMEintheNEWS.COM

Brandice Balschmiter gave up one hit after the fourth inning against Charlotte on Saturday in the Atlantic 10 Championship game. The Minutewomen were crowned A-10 Champions for the 20th time and will start their run in the NCAA Tournament on May 15.

Timely hitting from rookie lifts UMass runners on first and second and the game still scoreless, Balschmiter struck out the next batter to end the scoring threat.

SOFTBALL from page 10

In the bottom of the fourth, the Minutewomen produced the clutch hits needed to win the tournament. With two outs and runners on first and second, freshman designated hitter Lindsay Maroney doubled to center field scoring junior right fielder Samantha Salato for the first run of the game.

Sticking with the freshmen, Sortino put in freshman Audrey Boutin to pinch-hit for junior second baseman Carly Morin. Boutin hit a double to center field in her first A-10 Tournament appearance scoring both sophomore first baseman Sarah Reeves and Maroney.

"I thought they did a great job, and we got our biggest hits from the class of 2011," Sortino said. "They delivered the game-winning hits."

Sophomore center fielder Carly Normandin doubled through the right side, but Morin, who came back in the game for Boutin, tried to score from second and was thrown out at home to end the inning.

Charlotte managed only one hit off Balschmiter after the fourth inning, and UMass could not muster any hits after the three-run fourth.

The championship game was the largest margin of victory for the Minutewomen in the tournament, as every game was close. UMass defeated Fordham, 2-0, in the first round and went nine innings against Charlotte in the semifinals for a 5-4 win. Sortino feels the league is getting better each year.

"The coaches in this league have really raised the bar," she said. "They've gone out and got great talent, and they are well coached. I think the Atlantic 10 is definitely on the up swing every year."

Game Notes

Maroney went 5-10 in her first A-10 Tournament with two key RBI's... Junior third baseman Whitney Mollica knocked in the game-winning RBI in the semi-final against Charlotte to put UMass in the championship game. With two outs and the game tied, senior left fielder Lauren Proctor hit a single and then advanced to second on a wild pitch. Mollica then provided the game winning single...Balschmiter went all nine innings in the semi-final game. On the season, Boutin has totaled 21 at bats and has appeared in 13 games with seven starts.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames a student umass edu

Amherst plays host to NCAA regional

REGIONAL from page 10

Sooners came to the Pioneer Valley and defeated UMass twice en route to a regional championship. After failing to make it back to the Super Regionals last season, the team is glad to be back in Amherst for another chance at making a deep postseason run.

The Minutewomen returned home from Charlotte after claiming their 20th Atlantic 10 Championship, which will be a different experience for many of the players after hosting both the conference and regional tournaments in Amherst last season.

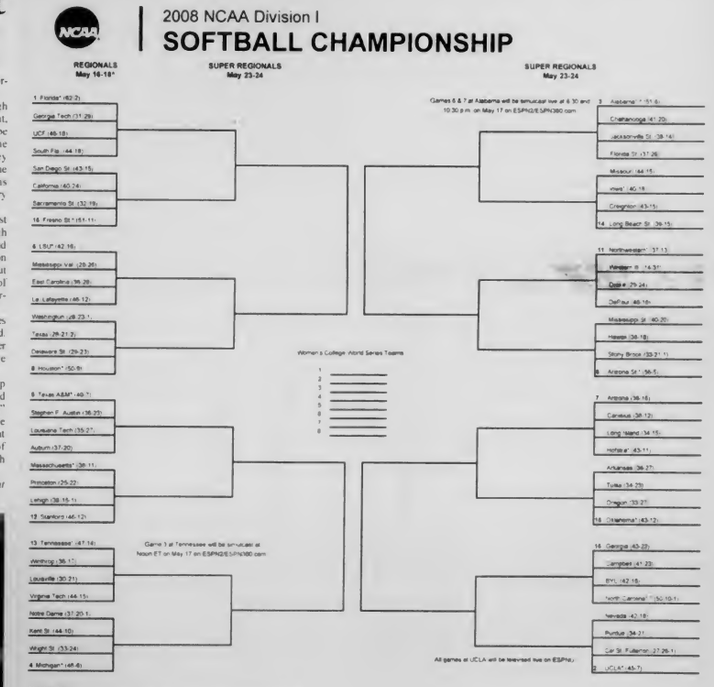
"I felt the adverse effects of the crowd the other day at Charlotte," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "We were down, and it was so loud you couldn't hear yourself think down there. Our crowd will be very helpful to us."

For senior Lauren Proctor, hosting in the opening round means one more chance to play in front of the home crowd, something she is excited to be a part of.

"I think being at home is a great advantage," Proctor said. "We've got a core group of fans at home that are so loyal and so helpful. Having them there is really important to us."

If UMass makes it through the first round of the tournament, the next likely opponent will be the Aggies, who are hosting the corresponding regional tourney and are the heavy favorite. The Minutewomen defeated Texas A&M – then No. 2 in the country – on March 1 in a 4-1 decision.

However, the Aggies' two best players, Amanda Scarborough (injury) and Big 12 Pitcher and Player of the Year Megan Gibson did not play in the game. Without looking ahead too much, some of the Minutewomen are looking forward to the potential rematch.



"They have some good athletes that we didn't get to see," Mollica said. "So we have to be ready, no matter who we face, but obviously we have to take this one game at a time."

"We saw Texas A&M come up on the screen and said, 'That would be a great one to be paired up with,'" Balschmiter said. "Looking into the future a little bit, it would be great to face them again if we take care of business against Princeton, Lehigh and Stanford first."

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr a student umass edu

Athletic director John McCutcheon and UMass coach Elaine Sortino could be celebrating another victory in Amherst this season.

MOVINGON?
Rent a Truck or Cargo Van
Starting at $19.95
Special Reduced Rates Monday to Thursday

POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
- Round Trip Rentals to and from Boston, New York & New Jersey
- One Way Rentals
- Hand Trucks & Furniture Pads Available for Rent
- Boxes & Moving Accessories Available for Sale

The Economical Way To Move
549-RENT (7368)
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
www.pottersauto.com

Graduating?
ORDER A COMMENCEMENT DVD
BROUGHT TO YOU BY:
UVC TV 19
visit www.umass.edu/uvctv19 for more details
or call 413-545-1283

Smith College School for Social Work
OPEN HOUSE
for MSW & PhD programs
Monday, June 9, 2008
Campus Center
Noon–5:00 pm
To register, please call the Office of Admission at 413-585-7960 or email to sswadm@email.smith.edu
Smith College School for Social Work
Office of Admission, Lilly Hall
Northampton, Massachusetts 01063
Tel: 413-585-7960
E-mail: sswadm@email.smith.edu
www.smith.edu/ssw

UMass wraps up season in Philadelphia

By Jeff R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts rowing team competed this past weekend in the largest collegiate regatta, the Dad Vail Regatta and came away with a second- and sixth-place finish.

The Dad Vail Regatta featured over 100 schools from all over the United Sates and Canada competing in over 150 races this past Friday and Saturday. The event took place on the Schuylkill River in Philadelphia.

The Minutewomen raced five boats this weekend with three boats advancing to the semifinals. Two advanced to the finals. The Varsity 4 and Novice 4 boats were eliminated on the first day's action in the preliminary rounds.

The most successful boat on the day for UMass was its Second Varsity 8. Coming into the race, the boat was given a top seed and was expected to do very well against the other 25 schools competing. After having the fastest time in the preliminary heats on Friday (6 minutes, 33.143 seconds), the Minutewomen took first in their heat (6:29.621) of the semifinals on Saturday. Their semifinal time was the second-fastest overall time, fewer than a second behind Buffalo (6:29.033).

Later on Saturday, UMass raced for the Coleman D. Boylan Trophy in the finals for the Second Varsity 8 event. The Minutewomen (6:40.489) again had the second-fastest time, but this time fell to Purdue (6:21.810) and Alabama (6:30.251) rounding out the top three. Taking fourth above the Minutewomen (6:35.047) was Fordham (6:34.178), and falling in last place in the heat was Temple (6:39.914).

The regatta was the final race of the season for the Minutewomen. The season saw a lot of promise from the large number of freshmen who contributed to the team. With seven freshmen rowing in the Varsity and Second Varsity 8 boats and the Novice 8 boat continually having success, the Minutewomen have a strong foundation to work with next year.

Jeff R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu.

Georgia Tech (6:49.351) took third place in the heat followed by Philadelphia (6:57.146), Temple (6:58.639) and Connecticut (7:10.201). The Minutewomen's semifinal time was good for the sixth best overall.

Racing for the Sara Vaughn Trophy, the Minutewomen (7:00.812) took sixth. Grand Valley (6:39.821) won the event with Saint Joseph's (6:44.319) taking second, Bucknell (6:48.150) taking third followed by Alabama (6:51.858) and Orange Coast (6:56.290).

UMass's Varsity 8 boat, which took third place last year, made it out of the preliminaries but could not advance past the semifinals. With the 14th-fastest overall time (6:38.459) out of the 40 schools in the preliminaries, the Minutewomen advanced to the semifinals and raced in the first heat. With the top two in each heat advancing, UMass's fifth-place finish was not good enough for them to qualify for the finals.

Sacramento (6:19.901) took first in the heat, with Purdue (6:21.810) and Alabama (6:30.251) rounding out the top three. Taking fourth above the Minutewomen (6:35.047) was Fordham (6:34.178), and falling in last place in the heat was Temple (6:39.914).

The regatta was the final race of the season for the Minutewomen. The season saw a lot of promise from the large number of freshmen who contributed to the team. With seven freshmen rowing in the Varsity and Second Varsity 8 boats and the Novice 8 boat continually having success, the Minutewomen have a strong foundation to work with next year.

Jeff R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu.

The Second Varsity 8 boat led the Minutewomen to a second place finish at the largest collegiate regatta this past weekend.

Track and field finish 7th

By Sam Grossack
Collegian Staff

This past weekend, the Massachusetts track and field teams traveled to New Hampshire where the athletes who qualified for the New England Championships competed. Both the men and women's teams finished in seventh place. Boston College came in first for the women, and Rhode Island finished on top for the men.

The top performance of the weekend for the Minutewomen came from sophomore Lisa Wilson who finished second in the discus throw with a distance of 45.8 meters. Wilson has had a breakout season and will be a top competitor next season.

Christina DeRosa continued a solid season with a third-place finish in the 5K with a time of 16 minutes, 48.66 seconds.. Finishing in seventh place was Shiyi Zan 20 seconds after DeRosa and good for the fifth fastest time in UMass history while qualifying her for the ECAC Championships next weekend.

Other noteworthy Minutewomen performances were put in by Kristina Landau, Stephanie Aguguo, Brittany Bakanowski and Alisha Tatham. Landau finished fourth in the javelin, Aguguo finished fifth in the triple jump, while Bakanowski finished fourth in the 400-meter hurdles and Tatham finished sixth in the 200-meter.

On the men's side, Nicolai Naranjo, Nils Fischer and Jonathan Pierce took first, third and sixth respectively in the 5K. These three athletes combined to score half of UMass's 38 points. Additionally, they each qualified for next week's IC4A Championship in New Jersey.

The men's team also had two relay teams who posted fourth place finishes in their events. Nathan Barksdale, Brian Miller, Samuel Laorenza and Tyler Cotto finished the 4x100 in 42.94 seconds. In the 4x800, Ryan Durkin, Ryan Diorio, James Bentley and Scott VanderMolen finished in 7:45.58.

Freshman Chris Dzidek finished ninth in the decathlon, just missing out on points. However, he was able to put up third-place finishes in the high jump, pole vault and 110-meter hurdles.

Next weekend, both teams will travel to Princeton, N.J. with the athletes who qualified for the IC4A Championships for men and the ECAC Championships for women. Next week will be the last chance for athletes to qualify for the NCAA Championships held the weekend of May 30.

Sam Grossack can be reached at sgrossac@student.umass.edu.

KEITH JOPPLING/COLLEGIAN

The Minutewomen placed seventh in the New England Championships over the weekend.

Minutemen set for success next season

BASEBALL from page 10

JENNA STOLOWITZ/COLLEGIAN

Junior Mike Dicato led the Minutemen with solid pitching after he limited the Rams to two earned runs in eight innings in Game One.

Greenwood and chased him from the game following the inning.

Adam Tempesta hit a two-run single in the inning before Jim Macdonald followed with a two-run double that knocked in Ryan Franczek and Tempesta to give the Minutemen a 4-1 lead. Macdonald later scored on a throwing error by Zaneski, the catcher.

Mitchell Clegg came into the game for the final two innings, allowing one run in the eighth before retiring the side in order in the ninth.

In Game One, junior Mike Dicato gave UMass another solid pitching performance. He limited the Rams to two earned runs (three total) in eight innings and recorded his second complete game of the season but was outdueled by URI's Brett Palanski.

Palanski allowed one run over 6 2/3 innings before Luke Demko came in and pitched 2 1/3 scoreless innings without allowing a hit.

Barring unlikely circumstances, the Minutemen's season is over, but Dicato and Clegg will be back next season. Both showed the ability to be front-end starters this season; and if they're able to build upon their success of this season, along with Serino, UMass will have a chance to have a solid rotation next season.

Game notes

Tempesta was the only member of the Minutemen to record two hits in the first game of the series. The team had four hits ... Mike Donato returned to action for the first time since the Charlotte series three weekends ago. He went 1-for-13 over the three games ... Bryan Garrity struggled, also going 1-for-13 and dropping his season average to .207.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

One Collegian editor's final farewell

RICE from page 10

gally parked my 1991 formerly blue Toyota Corolla to interview UMass softball coach Elaine Sortino.

It was still February. There was snow on the ground, and there was no chance of the team's practicing outside. They were in the middle of their early-season trips to invitational tournaments in the South and West, where most of the rest of the collegiate softball world was hard at work outside.

And yet here was coach Sortino, working with one of her pitchers, Bailey Sanders and the team's catcher, Jessica Serio. They were in a dirty, concrete tunnel buried beneath Commonwealth Ave., between Boyden and the fields on the other side of the street. They had put together a makeshift pitcher's circle, put a net behind Serio and placed a bat-wielding mannequin at home plate.

This is where the perennial A-10 Champions train? I didn't actually ask the question. I didn't have to. I could hear Sortino's "Yup" response already. She didn't care, she had a season to worry about – not what facilities her team had to work out in.

This is my third consecutive year covering the team, so Sortino knew me well enough to tell me all about Bailey's off-season surgery, how she almost never got to pitch in last year's NCAA Regionals, spent the entire offseason flat on her back after having a rib removed and had surgery to repair a clogged artery in her throwing arm.

She told me all this after I watched Bailey throw harder than she ever had during her freshman year. Coach Sortino's passion wasn't for the wins that would come with having a healthy Bailey Sanders back in the lineup, it was for the hard work her player put in to come back and play again.

That's when I realized that's what I had to do. I found myself in the midst of one of the most common sports metaphors in the writing world. I was on the disabled list, and no one was going to carry me back onto the field – I had to do it myself.

For the first time in a while, I had passion again. I had a story – a great story that I wanted everyone to hear, and it was mine to write and to tell everyone about. I didn't publish until just last week, just in time for the Atlantic 10 Tournament. I don't know if it was my best work, or even close, but it's one of the pieces I will remember the most because it's the one that reminded me why I love doing this at a time when I truly needed such a reminder.

From that moment down in the bowels of Boyden Gymnasium I decided to fight my way back – back from my mental funk, back from one of the lowest points in my life and back to the love I have for everyone and everything that goes on in those couple of rooms in the Campus Center basement.

And that's how I want to leave the Collegian, with nothing but love for every inch of that place, from the mysterious cork board on the walls in the newsroom to the old iMacs in graphics with the login window burned into the monitor.

As I move on to the next phase in my life, my only regret is that I cannot come back for one more year so I can end my career at the Collegian the way in which I would have liked. I poured my heart and soul into this place for three years, and I like to think that the paper might be a little better off now than when former Editor in Chief Eric Athas first showed me around during the fall of 2005.

There is little left for me to say except for a heart-felt thank you to anyone and everyone who ever worked with me in the dungeon. Because of every one of you, and what each became as a whole, as the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, I am still sitting here, on one of my last nights in the newsroom, writing a column I thought for a while I may never write.

It took a dank, dark, forgotten hallway and a softball pitcher on an under-publicized, overachieving team to remind me what really mattered to me. Hopefully, I will never forget that again.

Who knows when I will need another kick in the rear, but I know it could not have happened without the Collegian and the passion of one coach and one player. I nearly lost it all, and it seems I made it back just in time to say goodbye.

I guess it's funny how life works out that way.

Jeremy Rice is the Collegian's sports editor. He can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

Got trash?

Dump your apartment cleanout garbage in the right place:

Bring your student ID to get in!

The Amherst Transfer Station

Trash, furniture, mattresses, TVs, computers & appliances accepted

Disposal fees apply

740 Belchertown Road (Route 9), 2 miles East of Dunkin Doughnuts

Open 8am-2pm Tuesdays, Thursdays, & Saturdays

For more information, visit www.amherstma.gov/recycling or call the Amherst Dept. of Public Works 413-259-3050

YOUR ONE STOP SHOP FOR PARTY SUPPLIES & EQUIPMENT RENTALS!

Carpet Cleaners • Canopies • Wall Paper Steamers • Tables • Tents • Glassware www.taylorrental.com/hadley

TAYLOR RENTAL

Party Plus

577 Granby Rd. Rt. 202, SOUTH HADLEY 413-533-5503

Rt. 9 301 Russell St. HADLEY 413-584-4184

WE SELL MOVING SUPPLIES

Arigato II ありがと Hibachi Steak & Seafood

15% off with Student ID

(except Friday & Saturdays)

Sushi · Full Bar · Cocktails

Reservations Suggested

413.253.0707

Get it while it's hot.

1		7	5			4	2	9
	2
	9			7	8
		6		2	1
8								2
			9	3		7
			7	8			6
							9
2	4	8			9	5		7

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Balls are to men what purses are to women."

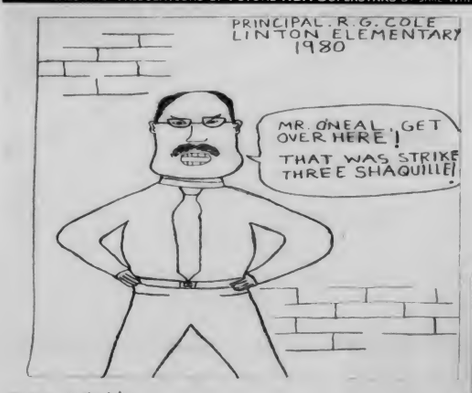
— Sarah Jessica Parker as "Carrie Bradshaw"



BROTHERS WATT By William Wilson

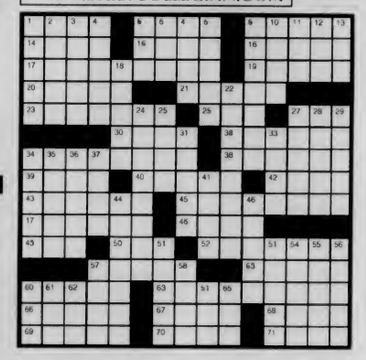
WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Kid Shay

THE TRIALS AND TRIBULATIONS OF FUTURE NBA SUPERSTARS By Jake Whitt

ACROSS
1 Dirty air
5 Dress line
9 Periodical number
14 Adhesive strip
15 Drake or bull
16 Ermine in summer
17 Sumatran ape
19 Hotel posting
20 Lascivious looker
21 Loco or Dry
23 Landlords
26 Visualize
27 Alt. spelling
30 Methods
32 Moby Dick, maybe?
34 Route from home to first
38 Brown shade
39 Stratford's river
40 Rad!
42 Sleeve cards
43 Pop in more film
45 Polyglot
47 Chalk remover
48 Lightly burn
49 Neighbor of Turk
50 CD-
52 Swordsman, at times
57 Something to talk about
59 Asinine
60 Pay
63 Orkneys' neighbors
66 Houston pro
67 Scarlett's spread
68 Yeats or Keats
69 Go bad, as perishables
70 Part of a dance
71 Caesar and Vicious

DOWN
1 Seat at a bar
2 Bart Simpson's mom
3 October gems
4 Heredity units
5 Tex. campus
6 Chow down
7 Lamenter's cry
8 Program choices
9 Tel Aviv man
10 Comic Laurel
11 Drunkard
12 Abu Dhabi, Dubai, et al.
13 UFO pilots
18 Dog's warning
22 Like summer rentals
24 Bill of precipitation
25 "Auld Lang ___"
27 Town near Florence
28 Bancroft and Baxter
29 Cook in an oven
31 Makes airtight
33 Actor Bridges
34 Uncovers
35 Cartoonist Tex
36 Battery type
37 Son of Seth
41 Draws
44 Type of spray
46 Object of a quest
51 Sprays
53 Ginger cookies
54 Capital on the Red River
55 Finished
56 Takes five
57 Hatcher or Garr
58 Chew the fat
60 Once existed
61 Small snake
62 Classic Pontiac letters
64 Alore
65 Barroom sprgot

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!



WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Continuing & Professional Education

UMassAmherst Outreach

"Give me whiskey. Ginger ale on the side. And don't be stingy, baby."
– Prof. M. Carolan, ENG 339

BLOG IT OUT!
www.ulearnublog.net

Free copies of jubilat

a national literary magazine published here on campus

To get your copy, come by Bartlett 482 or write us a line jubilat@english.umass.edu

This event was sponsored in part by the UMass Amherst Alumni Association. Alumnotes can be sent to you and UMAA is the UMass Ally Course

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18

If your professor is actually attempting to teach this late in the semester, stand up and demand they be tested for drug use.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20

Put back that Grab & Go sandwich. You're not Jacoby Ellsbury, mister.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19

Twisted Teas and sweatpants today; driving the kids to soccer practice tomorrow!

taurus Apr. 20-May 20

Spring Fashion Tip No. 17: Bedazzle that unibrow, and go from uni-drab to uni-fab in fewer than five minutes.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21

Keep the booze out of the office. Everything will be just fine.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22

Harvesting unnecessary organs (appendix, lungs) for sale on the black market is actually a very effective fundraising method.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22

Write an acrostic poem Explicating what happens to girls when They are near you.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22

Do everything you can to get rid of this "Speed Racer" moniker that's been plaguing you.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22

Some will turn into giant blueberries, others will shrink but you alone will be honored with the gift of chocolate.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21

When you're boyfriend comes back from studying abroad, just tell him you are getting paid to be a surrogate mother.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21

Throw pillows may not make your cardboard box much more comfortable, but they will add a zesty splash of color.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19

Don't ride in cars with strangers claiming to have candy. Make them show you the merchandise, then dimb in.

One of these sitcom stars is not drunk. Circle the one that does not fit.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENT

Meeting Notice
Top of Campus, Incorporated (TOC, Inc.) will hold its Annual Meeting in Campus Center 802, Wednesday, May 28, 2008 at 12:00 p.m.

APT FOR RENT

6/1. 2 bedroom, free couch, recliner, cables, bedframes. $1100/mo. Contact: gware@student.umass.edu

Center of Town, 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

5 bedroom $2150 Hadley. June 1st. Parking, garden, plowing, garbage included, bus stop, bike path. Marciano 413-387-0093 or marcianotalula@hotmail.com

Townhouse #32 for rent. Lease starting June 1st. Right near bus stop. Partially furnished.

APT FOR RENT

New appliances installed. New kitchen floor, 3 bedroom. 1.5 bathroom. $1500 a month. contact dexter@student.umass.edu

For 9/1/08. Northampton.
2 Bedrooms $825+
3 Bedrooms $1025+
4 Bedrooms $1225+
6 Bedrooms $1500+
584-4920 or 253-7436

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

AMHERST, Mill Valley Estates Limited Time Offer, $1000 Off Your Move-In Costs! 2 bedroom $1175, 3 bedroom $1475, 4 bedroom $2225 includes heat/hot water, air, washer/dryer hookups, dishwasher and 2 full baths. Now Renting for Summer & Fall 2008! Call now 413-253-7377, email: millvalleyestates@winnco.com

APT FOR RENT

Subletting Puffton for the Summer! Ax about me! 508-335-0seven7seven Pretty cheap.

EMPLOYMENT

Drivers WANTED apply at D.P. Dough downtown Amherst.

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals, full and part time positions available immediately. Only those able to work the upcoming summer should apply. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call 413-584-4746 or mfo@idealmovers.com

Summer Warehouse positions available for seasonal trucking company. Looking for warehouse workers to work two, 10-day sessions in June and August. Work with your friends for $100/day. Long hours, short session! Spend June in our warehouse and July at the beach. Call for more info: 888-949-5089.

EMPLOYMENT

Boltwood Marketplace. Open air market for farmers and artists. Opens Saturday May 10th 9am-1pm. Open every Saturday through July 26th. Looking for vendors. www.boltwoodmarket.com or 253-7879.

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

As part of our expansion program, our company is looking for part time Work from home account managers and sales representatives, it pays $500 a month plus benefits and takes only little of your time. Please contact us for more details. Requirements-should be a computer literate. 2-3 hours access to the internet weekly. Must be over 19yrs of age. Must be efficient and dedicated. If you are interested and need more information, Contact Dan Frank, (dan.frank39@yahoo.com)

FOR SALE

Twin bed (brand new), computer desk & chair, dresser. Each can be sold individually or in a package. Email for more info: dexter@student.umass.edu

GENERAL

INK & TONER CARTRIDGES 30-60% LESS. ECO-FRIENDLY AMHERST 413-548-9905 NORTHAMPTON 413-517-0099
5 Bedroom+ newer home, 2 full baths, laundry hook-ups, large yard, close to UMass Contact (413) 549-4270

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test.233 N Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, MAY 12, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass seizes 20th A–10 title

Balschmiter led team in weekend wins

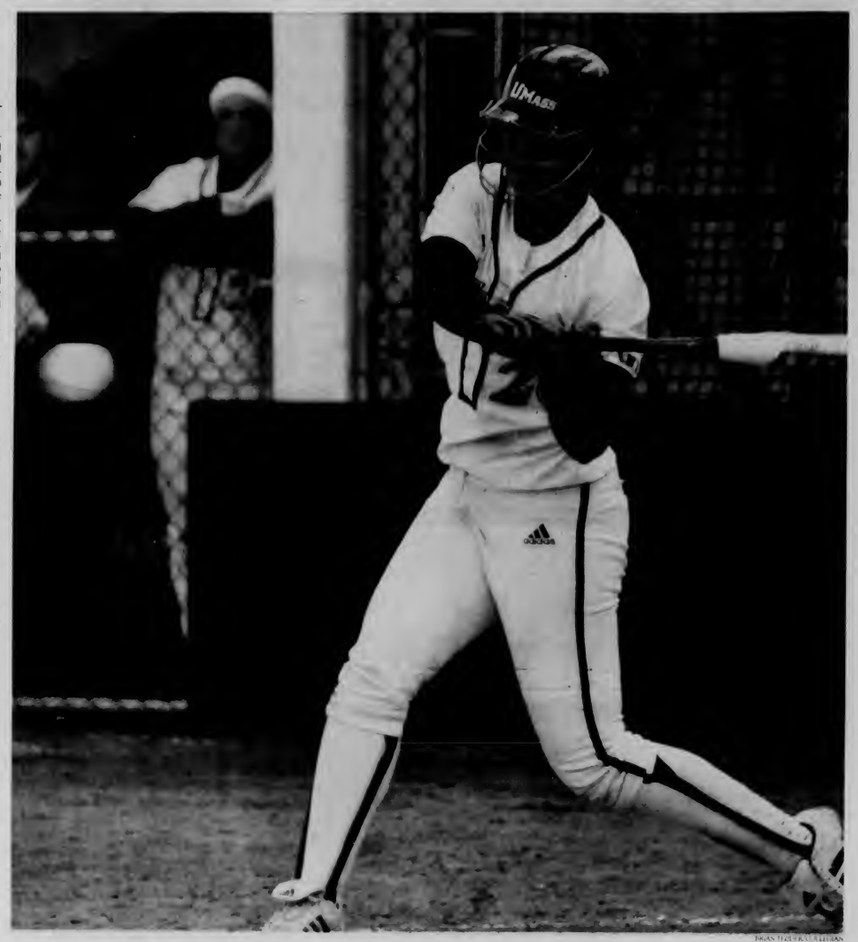
BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Behind clutch hitting and solid pitching, the Massachusetts softball team squeezed through tough competition to win its 20th Atlantic 10 title in a 3-0 victory over Charlotte on Saturday.

On Friday, the Minutewomen battled from behind to defeat Charlotte in the semifinal, 5-4, in nine innings. UMass, Fordham and Charlotte all advanced to the final championship day. The Minutewomen remained undefeated and secured a spot in the championship game. Charlotte and Fordham played earlier in the day with Charlotte winning and advancing to the final game with a 2-1 win.

"This was a tough tournament for us. We had to play a real tough Fordham team in the first round, and Charlotte was unbelievable [on Friday]," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said in a post-game interview with CBS Sports. "Today they had a couple of flurries at us, and we showed up with our A-game on the mound, took care of the ball and had some timely hitting."

UMass	5
Charlotte	4
UMass	3
Charlotte	0



Junior pitcher Brandice Balschmiter brought her best to the mound on Saturday by throwing a complete game shutout and only allowing Charlotte to get three hits. Balschmiter also struck out 10 batters including the final batter of the game to wrap up the championship.

"Much better compared to the last two days of the tournament," Balschmiter said in her post-game interview. "I just reared back and tried to blow it by them to finish them out a little bit."

On Friday, Balschmiter allowed four runs (two earned) and let up eight hits. However she struck out 11 batters and only walked one. The Minutewomen defense that helped her against Fordham committed four errors in the semifinal game.

In the championship game, Balschmiter came out stronger than she did on Friday by not allowing a base runner to reach until the fourth inning. In that fourth inning, Balschmiter got herself out of a jam. With two outs, she allowed back-to-back singles from the 49ers. With

See SOFTBALL on page 7

BRIAN TSUCHIYA/COLLEGIAN

Freshman Audrey Boutin hit a pinch–hit double bringing home Sarah Reeves and Lindsay Maroney in her first Atlantic 10 Tournament appearance. Boutin and the class of 2011 led the Minutewomen with timely hitting in the 3–0 win against Charlotte in the championship game on Saturday.

Amherst, here they come

Minutewomen host NCAA regional for third straight year

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For the third year in a row, the Massachusetts softball team will play host to one of 16 regional tournaments in the opening round of the NCAA Women's Softball Championship, and for the third year in a row, it will do so as a No. 2 seed.

"We're home again, third year in a row. It's a great feeling," pitcher Brandice Balschmiter said.

The 12th-seeded Stanford Cardinals will fly cross-country to Amherst as the top seed in the regional, as will No. 3 Princeton and No. 4 Lehigh, which were also part of the 2006 Amherst Regional.

As has become the tradition, the Minutewomen watched and waited at The Hangar on University Dr in Amherst last night at 10 p.m. for ESPN's NCAA Softball Selection Show. After 5th overall seed Texas A&M was announced as the host school for its regional, which includes Louisiana Tech, Auburn and Stephen F. Austin, the Amherst Regional was announced, filling the small pub with cheers from the team.

"This is our third year in a row hosting, so I'm pleasantly surprised," third baseman Whitney Mollica said. "It's just better because we have our home crowd here, and we can rest here. We don't have to be travelling anywhere, so it's better for us in the long run."

In 2006, the Minutewomen won the Amherst Regional without having to play top-seeded Texas A&M, which lost twice to Lehigh. The Minutewomen defeated Albany, 2-0, in the opening round of the tournament, then defeated Lehigh on back-to-back days to move on to the Super Regionals, where Balschmiter and the Minutewomen lost a best-of-three series to Northwestern.

Last season, the Oklahoma

See REGIONAL on page 7

BRIAN TSUCHIYA/COLLEGIAN

UMass coach Elaine Sortino (center) was thrilled to see that her team does not have to travel for the NCAA Tournament's opening round.

Regaining focus: an editor's last thoughts

Jeremy Rice

I never imagined it would be this way, but my senior year of college has been the most difficult eight months of my life.

I guess seeing your father get sent off to prison and losing the love of your life in the span of two months will do that to you. But this column is not about that. It's about the fact that I am still here. I'm still the sports editor for the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, and I will be until I officially graduate on May 24.

It's funny how life will take a turn for the worse right when you think it's about to get better than it's ever been, but that's just how it happened this time. I was finally doing what I had set out to do since I started writing for my high school paper in 10th grade. I was covering football and had become sports editor at my college newspaper.

From the time I was covering the same team in high school that I played for (a brand-new program that barely won any games) to finding out UMass skier Rush Hawkins got his name from his great-grandfather, who was a general in the Union Army in the Civil War, everything I had done had been with one goal in mind: one day I would cover football.

Getting to know Rush became my first big break in the journalism world. It was because of him that I broke the story about the ski team's coach getting fired; and because of that story, I was able to write a complete history of the program, talk to former and current coaches, athletes and even the athletic director. The thrill of following that story from start to completion told me for the first time that I was in the right field.

I worked my way up the ranks from field hockey to skiing to softball to soccer to hockey before my chance came in my third year with the Collegian. I was here, driving to road games, writing game wraps and side bars and finally really seeing my future ahead of me.

That's when my life seemed to fall apart. In November 2007, I fell into a depression for several months and lost sight of everything for which I worked. My job at ESPN.com, my position as sports editor, my grades and my life just seemed less important. I even considered stepping down at the Collegian because I could feel that my heart just wasn't in it like it had been before.

But then something finally happened that reminded me why I loved doing this in the first place. I walked down to Boyden Gym from wherever I had ille-

See RICE on page 8

Season outlook bleak after weekend

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After losing two of three games this weekend against Rhode Island, the Massachusetts baseball team played itself out of contention for the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

The Minutemen (17-24, 10-14 A-10) split a doubleheader on Saturday but lost the final game of the series on Sunday and now sit 2.5 games behind sixth place St. Bonaventure with just one conference series remaining.

UMass plays Quinnipiac tomorrow before wrapping up its season this weekend at Earl Lorden Field against Fordham.

The story of yesterday's game was Jared Freni's lack of control. The sophomore walked five batters in 4 1/3 innings while allowing three runs.

Three of the walks came in the first three innings, and although the Rams couldn't capitalize on them, Freni's pitch count was elevated.

URI (27-22-1, 14-9-1 A-10) scored two runs in the fourth and then added another in the fifth. Freni was removed from the game after walking Pete Mastors. With freshman Nick Serino on in relief, Mastors stole second and third before eventually scoring on a Zach Zaneski single.

Serino pitched well (no runs in 3 2/3 innings). But the UMass offense struggled, and the two unearned runs it scored in the fourth wasn't enough.

In Game 2 of Saturday's doubleheader, the Minutemen received their second quality start of the weekend. Mitchell Clegg limited the Rams to two runs over seven innings.

UMass trailed 1-0 going into the fifth inning but scored five runs off starter Nick

See BASEBALL on page 8

THE COLLEGIAN'S SUMMER MOVIE PREDICTIONS | PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

PARTLY SUNNY : HI: 71 LO: 41 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, MAY 13, 2008

MEGHAN MURPHY/COLLEGIAN

Professors and students made statements in support of student Jason Vassell at a press conference on Monday, calling the charges against him "excessive."

Sister steadfast on case

Vassell sibling, committee petition for lesser charges

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Committee for Justice for Jason Vassell and over 1,700 University of Massachusetts students, faculty, alumni and community members sent a message to the office of Northwestern District Attorney Elizabeth D. Scheibel on Monday morning.

The committee sent a petition to the D.A.'s office, stating it wants the case against Vassell to be "seriously and carefully" reconsidered and for the "excessive" charges against him to be lessened.

Vassell, a 23-year-old African American and former student at UMass, faces two counts of aggravated assault with a dangerous weapon stemming from a Feb. 3 incident on campus involving him and two Caucasian males not enrolled at the University. The charges could result in a maximum of 30 years behind bars.

The D.A.'s office did not comment on the pending case but confirmed that the petition was delivered and reviewed by the district attorney's office yesterday.

"The UMass Police investigated the case, and then it was sent over to the judicial system. It's really a case now that is in the hands of the district attorney," said UMass spokesman Ed Blagoszewski.

According to a press release, the petition is "an attempt to again communicate to the prosecutor the extent of this community's concern and dismay at the apparent excessiveness and unfairness in her office's prosecution of this case."

The petition follows a Feb. 27 vigil and March 12 rally held on campus for Vassell.

A violent altercation involving Vassell and the two white males occurred at approximately 5 a.m. on Feb. 3 in Vassell's dormitory in the Southwest Residential Area. John Bowes, 20, and Jonathan Bosse, 19, allegedly yelled racial epitaphs at Vassell, kicked in his window and gained access into the building. A fight followed, which left Vassell with a broken nose and the two other men with stab wounds.

Vassell was arrested nine hours later, and Bowes was later charged with two hate crimes and disorderly conduct. Bosse has not been charged.

Monday's press conference announced the petition intended to raise awareness about the case and the upcoming court hearings. They include a May 27 court date for Bowes at Eastern Hampshire District Court and Vassell's pretrial hearing at Hampshire Superior Court on July 24.

The press conference featured statements from a number of pro-

See VASSELL on page 3

Engineering students show off design skills at Student Union

BY ELIZABETH HAWLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For many engineering students, a year of hard work finally culminated in the Electrical and Computer Engineering Senior Design Project Day last Friday, when students presented their projects in Marcus Hall.

"It's a load off my shoulders," said Anthony Swochak, who worked on the Crossroads team.

Swochak said the project was like a job because students usually spent a minimum of eight hours in the lab. Swochak said his team was sometimes there all night.

Teammate Jarrod LaBarge agreed, saying that the project required "hundreds of hours" to complete.

The crossroads project was a warning system, designed to prevent car accidents that occur when a driver runs a red light. The system monitors each car as it approaches a red light and alerts others in the area when it becomes clear that a car isn't going to stop for the signal.

Swochak said the group went to a football stadium to test the system, with a roadside operator serving as the red light.

Both Swochak and LaBarge said their design seemed to go over well on design day.

LaBarge said there was a lot of interest in the project, partly because "it's a very everyday thing."

Swochak said a woman who spoke to him told him she had been in an accident because a car had run a red light.

"People like the idea that it was a problem that was out there," said Swochak.

The project is a requirement for electrical and computer engineering students in their senior year. Students form teams of four during their junior year, and each team works with a faculty advisor. This year, there were 15 teams at the Design Project Day, with a total of 60 students working on the projects.

Senior Design Project Co-Coordinator T. Baird Soules said the design day was a "showcase of the projects [students have] been working on since September" and called the day "a big success."

He said visitors included people who work in the industry as well as graduate students and friends and family members of the students.

LaBarge and Swochak worked with Sean Morrell, Daniel Marcq and with faculty advisors Hossein Pishro-Nik and Daiheng Ni. LaBarge said that the team's advisors suggested the project, which he said was talked about before but was never tested.

"It really simulates the work experience," said Swochak, citing the pressure of working on deadline, the need to budget the project and the division of labor.

"There's a lot you learn about what it would be like [to have an engineering job]," said LaBarge.

Friday marked the 18th anniversary of the Electrical and Computer Engineering Senior Design Project Day. Other designs included a program that would help poker players calculate odds and wireless drum sticks that can make sound and record it on any surface. Highlights also included an Internet remote control for appliances that can tell how much energy a device is using.

"Everyone's project was really interesting," said Swochak, adding that after so much time spent in the labs together "you kind of feel good for [the other teams]."

Elizabeth Hawley can be reached at ehawley@student.umass.edu.

Wilson pushes to rescind

President moves against dictator's degree

University of Massachusetts president Jack M. Wilson recommended yesterday that the Board of Trustees rescind an honorary degree awarded to Zimbabwe president Robert Mugabe more than 20 years ago.

The recommendation to withdraw Mugabe's award came after allegations that he had been involved in human rights violations and suppressed opposition to his policies.

The University awarded Mugabe the degree in 1986 after his 1980 election, when he was "seen as a force for democracy and reform," said the press release.

"In the two decades that have passed since the honorary degree was awarded, Robert Mugabe has pursued policies and taken actions that are antithetical to the values and beliefs of the University of Massachusetts," said Wilson in a statement. "I must recommend that we sever the connection that was formed when Robert Mugabe appeared to be a force for positive change in Africa. Today, that promise no longer exists."

If the board votes to follow through with Wilson's recommendation at its June 12 meeting, Mugabe's will be the first honorary UMass degree to be rescinded.

Board of Trustees chairman Robert J. Manning said that the board would take time at the meeting to discuss Wilson's suggestion and would "do what is appropriate and right."

The UMass student senate petitioned the board last year to withdraw Mugabe's degree. In response to the request, the board voted to officially rebuke his actions at its June 2007 meeting, referring to Mugabe as "a tyrannical dictator whose rule has been marked by intimidation, violence, fraud, and robbery," according to the Boston Globe.

Meghan Murphy

In an unprecedented move, UMass president Jack Wilson is pushing the Board of Trustees to take back Mugabe's honorary degree.

Seniors look into uncertainty

Career Services eases minds of worried, walking graduates

BY BEN WILLIAMS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's the time of year when seniors look graduation in the face and ask, "What now?" With growing concerns about the job market, graduating seniors begin to wonder how successful they will be finding a job in the "real world."

"It's scary," said senior psychology major Linda Kizelewicz. "My current plans right now are to stick with the part-time job I have, [and] create a resume ... I'm looking for a full-time job just to get me through the next year or two, to save up and eventually go to graduate school for psychology."

Kizelewicz said she worries about this being her first time searching for a full-time job and writing a resume, but says she doesn't have any qualms about entering the job market.

Still, the recession affecting our economy has people worried that increased layoffs and fewer jobs will hinder future possibilities. But Ginger Goldsbury, associate director at the University of Massachusetts Career Services, has a different message.

"We still have companies who send us jobs. There are still companies looking, and I think students need to be optimistic," said Goldsbury. "I think that the students who have been involved and who have done internships and prepared themselves well ... will have successful careers."

Goldsbury said that while there may be a slowdown in the economy, it doesn't mean it will stop completely.

"Companies will be hiring. They're hiring even though the market is bad. The people who get laid off are typically paid a lot more than entry level," she said, "and they need to continue hiring entry level staff so that they'll continue to exist. Having said that, that doesn't mean they're going to be hiring the 20 they would have hired last year."

She said hiring fewer is more likely.

Goldsbury remembers years ago when the country was in a similar economic situation and students were scared stiff of the job market. They just did nothing. But she is more optimistic for this generation.

"I don't have a sense that students are so nervous yet," she said. "They know the economy is bad, but they're not that nervous. In times like this, students typically apply more to graduate school. I don't know if that's really happening this year."

Goldsbury said that not only are companies still hiring, but they are also actively courting UMass students.

"I just started the career fair for engineering that starts in October, and I already have 12 companies – companies that are already planning on hiring for next year," said Goldsbury. "College students need to always have faith because people are looking for educated, articulate, motivated young people."

Goldsbury said using University resources can help in the transition between campus and a working environment. Additionally, she said the office can help students find a working environment, too, even if it takes some a bit longer.

"Students can use the online services forever and counseling services for 6 months [after they graduate]," said Goldsbury.

Ben Williams can be reached at bwilliam@student.umass.edu

Library lawn turns abortion graveyard

DAVID S. HOLLOWAY/COLLEGIAN

The Students For Life group set up a pro-life display outside of the Student Union Monday, highlighting the estimated number of abortions since 1973.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 135
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3499 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exner
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAuliff
COPY EDITOR Adam Seagon
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Sevinczuk
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marnen Wheeden
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallace
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Matthews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Gerber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Obenir
ASSISTANT NEWS Holli Scalzo
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ASST. WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbascianc
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Lee Wiscott
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE SCHOOL YEAR AND WEEKLY DURING THE SUMMER BY STUDENTS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST. THE COLLEGIAN IS A NON-PROFIT, SELF-SUPPORTING ENTITY. ADVERTISING REVENUE FOUNDED IN 1890, THE DAILY IS PRINTED ON RECYCLED PAPER AT THE HAMPSHIRE PRINTING PLANT IN HADLEY. THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST DOES NOT CONTROL THE CONTENT OF THE COLLEGIAN OR ANY OF THE VIEWS EXPRESSED HEREIN. THE COLLEGIAN IS NOT AFFILIATED WITH THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST, THE STUDENT GOVERNMENT ASSOCIATION, OR ANY OTHER GOVERNMENTAL ENTITY.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

COPY EDITOR
Sarah Belanger

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

WEB EDITOR
Steve Games

Massive earthquake leaves thousands dead in China

Killer 'quake topples schools, hospitals, chemical plants

BY WILLIAM FOREMAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

A powerful earthquake toppled buildings, schools and chemical plants Monday in central China, killing more than 8,700 people and trapping untold numbers in mounds of concrete, steel and earth in the country's worst quake in three decades.

The 7.9-magnitude quake devastated a region of small cities and towns set amid steep hills north of Sichuan's provincial capital of Chengdu. Striking in mid-afternoon, it emptied office buildings across the country in Beijing and could be felt as far away as Vietnam.

Snippets from state media and photos posted on the Internet underscored the immense scale of the devastation. In the town of Juyuan, south of the epicenter, a three-story high school collapsed, burying as many as 900 students and killing at least 50, the official Xinhua news agency said. Photos showed people using cranes, mechanical hoists and their hands to remove slabs of concrete and steel.

Buried teenagers struggling to break free from the rubble, "while others were crying out for help," Xinhua said. Families waited in the rain near the wreckage as rescuers wrote the names of the dead on a blackboard, Xinhua said.

The earthquake hit one of the last homes of the giant panda at the Wolong Nature Reserve and panda breeding center, in Wenchuan county, which remained out of contact, Xinhua said.

In Chengdu, it crashed telephone networks and hours later left parts of the city of 10 million in darkness.

"We can't get to sleep. We're afraid of the earthquake. We're afraid of all the shaking," said 52-year-old factory worker Huang Ju, who took her ailing, elderly mother out of the Jinjiang District People's Hospital. Outside, Huang sat in a wheelchair wrapped in blankets while her mother, who was ill, slept in a hospital bed next to her.

Xinhua reported 8,533 people died in Sichuan alone and 216 others in three other provinces and the mega-city of Chongqing.

Worst affected were four counties including the quake's epicenter in Wenchuan, 60 miles northwest of Chengdu. Landslides left roads impassable Tuesday, causing the government to order soldiers into the area on foot, state television said, and heavy rain prevented four military helicopters from landing.

Wenchuan's Communist Party secretary appealed for air drops of tents, food and medicine. "We also need medical workers to save the injured people here," Xinhua quoted Wang Bin as telling other officials who reached him by phone.

To the east, in Beichuan county, 80 percent of the buildings fell, and 10,000 people were injured, aside from 3,000 to 5,000 dead, Xinhua said. State media said two chemical plants in an industrial zone of the city of Mianyang collapsed, burying hundreds of people and spilling more than 80 tons of toxic liquid ammonia.

Though slow to release information at first, the government and its state media ramped up quickly. Nearly 20,000 soldiers, police and reservists were sent to the disaster area.

Disasters always pose a test for the communist government, whose mandate rests heavily on maintaining order, delivering economic growth, and providing relief in emergencies.

Pressure for a rapid response was particularly intense this year, with the government already grappling with public discontent over high inflation and a widespread uprising among Tibetans in western China while trying to prepare for the Aug. 8-24 Beijing Olympics.

"I am particularly saddened by the number of students and children affected by this tragedy," President Bush said in a statement.

International Olympic Committee President Jacques Rogge sent his condolences to President Hu Jintao, adding: "The Olympic Movement is at your side, especially during these difficult moments. Our thoughts are with you."

Premier Wen Jiabao, a geologist by training, called the quake "a major geological disaster," and traveled to the disaster area to oversee rescue and relief operations.

"Hang in a bit longer. The troops are rescuing you. We're shouted to people buried in the Traditional Medicine Hospital in the city of Dujiangyan, on the road to Wenchuan, in comments broadcast by CCTV.

"As long as there was a slightest hope, we should make our effort a hundred times and we will never relax," he said outside the collapsed school in Juyuan.

The quake was the deadliest since one in 1976 in the city of Tangshan near Beijing that killed 240,000 – although some reports say as many as 655,000 perished – the most devastating in modern history. A 1933 quake near where Monday's struck killed at least 9,000, according to geologists.

Monday's quake occurred on a fault where South Asia pushes against the Eurasian land mass, smashing the Sichuan plain into mountains leading to the Tibetan highlands — near communities that held sometimes violent protests of Chinese rule in mid-March.

Much of the area has been closed to foreign media and travelers since then, compounding the difficulties of getting information. Roads north from Chengdu to the disaster area were sealed off early Tuesday to all but emergency convoys.

In Chengdu, the region's commercial center, the airport closed for seven hours, reopening only for emergency and a few outbound flights. A major railway line to the northeast was ruptured, stranding about 10,000 passengers, Xinhua said. Although most of the power had been restored by nightfall, phone and Internet service was spotty and some neighborhoods remained without power and water.

Nervous residents spent the night outside, some playing cards or heading to the suburbs. State media, citing the Sichuan seismology bureau, reported 313 aftershocks.

"Traffic jams, no running water, power outs, everyone sitting in the streets, patients evacuated from hospitals sitting outside and waiting," said Ronen Medzini, an Israeli student in Chengdu, via text message.

When it hit shortly before 2:30 p.m., the quake rumbled for nearly three minutes, witnesses said, driving people into the streets in panic.

"It was really scary to be on the 26th floor in something like that," said Tom Weller, a 49-year-old American oil and gas consultant staying at the Holiday Inn. "You had to hold on to something like that or you'd fall over. It shook for so long and so violently, you wondered how long the building would be able to stand this."

While most buildings in the city held up, those in the countryside tumbled. On the outskirts of Chongqing, a school collapsed, killing at least five people. Residents said teachers kept the children inside, thinking it was safer.

The city of Mianyang ordered all able-bodied males under 50 to take water and tools and walk or drive to Beichuan, where most of the buildings had collapsed. "This is an especially challenging task," state TV showed Wen saying, reading from a statement. "In the face of the disaster, what's most important: is calmness, confidence, courage and powerful command."

Rescue workers search for victims in the debris of a collapsed hospital following a massive earthquake in China on Monday.

A special thanks to the sponsor of The Collegian's Graduation Guide

The University of Massachusetts Alumni Association took cues from a generation raised on MySpace and Facebook and created a social networking site of its own.

Called the "Alumni Online Community," the Web site features familiar features like a personal profile, the ability to connect with friends and message exchange options.

Additionally, there are more career-related features, such as an alumni directory and a place to upload resumes, as well a searchable job listings database and business profiles. Online tools will be available to teach interviewing and salary negotiation skills as well.

"The real value in any network is the new contacts – be they social or professional – that are possible. Only members have access to additional online tools to make those valuable new connections," an Alumni Association statement read. "They have expanded search capabilities in the directory to find alumni living in target areas, working in specific professions, or with like interests."

The service is only available to University alumni, who can join at umassalumni.com.

—Ben Williams

Parents insist on autism–vaccine link

Lawyers claim mercury caused regressive autism in children

BY KEVIN FREKING
ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Institute of Medicine said in 2004 there was no credible evidence to show that vaccines containing the preservative thimerosal led to autism in children. But thousands of families have a different take based on personal experience.

Some of them are going to court Monday as attorneys will attempt to show that the mercury-based preservative triggers symptoms of autism.

Two 10-year-old boys from Portland, Ore., will serve as test cases to determine whether many of the children and their families should be compensated. Attorneys for the boys will attempt to show the boys were happy, healthy and developing normally — but, after being exposed to vaccines with thimerosal, they began to regress.

Thimerosal has been removed in recent years from standard childhood vaccines, except flu vaccines that are not packaged in single-doses. The CDC says single-dose flu shots currently are available only in limited quantities. In 2004, a committee with the Institute of Medicine concluded there was no credible evidence that vaccines containing thimerosal caused autism.

Overall, nearly 4,900 families have filed claims with the U.S. Court of Claims alleging that vaccines caused autism and other neurological problems in their children. Lawyers for the families are presenting three different theories of how vaccines caused autism.

The Office of Special Masters of the claims court has instructed the plaintiffs to designate three test cases for each of the three theories — nine cases in all — and has assigned three special masters to handle the cases. Three cases in the first category were heard last year, but no decisions have been reached.

The two cases beginning Monday are among the three that focus on the second theory of causation: that thimerosal-containing vaccines alone cause autism. The plaintiff in the third case originally scheduled for hearing this month has withdrawn and lawyers and court officials are working to agree on substitute case.

The suit being heard Monday is against the Department of Health and Human Services, and the plaintiffs are asking for unspecified compensation for the injuries suffered. Damages supposedly would cover lost income after the person turns 18 and up to $250,000 for pain and suffering.

Hearings in the test cases for the third theory of causation are scheduled in mid-September.

Lawyers for the petitioning families in the cases being heard this month say they will present evidence that injections with thimerosal deposit a form of mercury in the brain. That mercury excites certain brain cells that stay chronically activated trying to get rid of the intrusion.

"In some kids, there's enough of it that it sets off this chronic neuroinflammatory pattern that can lead to regressive autism," said attorney Mike Williams.

In the end, the families' attorneys hope to convince the special master hearing their case that thimerosal belongs on the list of causes for the inflammation that leads to regressive autism.

To win, the attorneys for the two boys, William Mead and Jordan King, will have to show that it's more likely than not that the vaccine actually caused the injury.

Many members of the medical community are skeptical of the families' claims. They worry that the claims about the dangers of vaccines, could cause some people to forgo vaccines that prevent illness.

"I think that what's so endearing to me about the anti-vaccine people, is they're perfectly willing to go from one hypothesis to the next without a backward glance," said Dr. Paul Offit, director of the Vaccine Education Center at the Children's Hospital of Philadelphia.

Autism is a developmental disability that typically appears during the first three years of life and affects a person's ability to communicate and interact with others. Dr. Andrew Gerber, a psychiatrist, said that medical experts don't have a comprehensive understanding of what causes autism, but they do know there is a strong hereditary component.

Toxins from the environment could play a role, but currently, data does not support that they do, Gerber said.

Arguments are scheduled to go on throughout the month. A final decision could take several more months.

The families or the federal government can also appeal the decision of the special master to the Court of Federal Claims or to a federal appeals court.

The court Web site says more than 12,500 claims have been filed since creation of the program in 1987, including more than 5,300 autism cases, and more than $1.7 billion has been paid in claims. It says there is now more than $2.7 billion in a trust fund supported by an excise tax on each dose of vaccine covered by the program.

Lawyers illustrate self-defense plea fessors and student leaders but was highlighted by the words of Vassell's older sister, Tiffany.

VASSELL from page 1

"Jason means so much to our family and to see him going through such a difficult situation is heartbreaking. Yet we remain steadfast in our belief that the truth and justice will prevail," she said in an emotional address to those gathered in the Massachusetts room of the Mullins Center.

A statement from Jason Vassell's lawyers, David P. Hoose and Luke Ryan of Sassoon, Turnbull & Hoose, was also read by Tobias Baskin, an associate professor from the University's biology department.

"Jason does not understand why the district attorney initially chose to prosecute only him or sought to have him incarcerated as a dangerous person," Baskin read. "Having suffered a broken nose at the hands of Mr. Bowes, Jason is particularly perplexed as to why the district attorney now takes the position that Mr. Bowes did not commit a civil rights violation, which resulted in an injury."

After Baskin finished the prepared statement, he pulled out a small pocket knife from his pocket, and said, "I carry this around in my pocket because it's extremely useful. At least once a day, I find something that needs to be done that this can help me do.

"And I have to say, that if I ever find myself with two large people looming over me with a broken nose being beaten that I will take this out and do what Jason had to do. And that is defend myself," he said.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com

Jason Vassell's sister, Tiffany, read a statement at the press conference on Monday calling for reduced charges against her brother.

Wind aims to rival nuclear power in the government's new energy report

BY H. JOSEF HEBERT
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Two decades from now Americans could get as much electricity from windmills as from nuclear power plants, according to a government report that lays out a possible plan for wind energy growth.

The report, a collaboration between the Energy Department research labs and industry, concludes wind energy could generate 20 percent of the nation's electricity by 2030, about the same share now produced by nuclear reactors.

Such growth would pose a number of major challenges, but is achievable without the need of major new technological breakthroughs, said the report released Monday.

"The report indicates that we can do this nationally for less than half a cent per kilowatt hour if we have the vision," said Andrew Karsner, the Energy Department's assistant secretary for efficiency and renewable energy.

Wind energy today accounts for only about 1 percent of the nation's electricity, although the industry has been on a growth binge with a 45 percent jump in production last year.

To reach the 20 percent production level, wind turbines would have to produce 300,000 megawatts of power, compared to about 16,000 megawatts generated today. Such growth would envision more than 75,000 new wind turbines, many of them larger than those operating today. About 54,000 megawatts would be produced by turbines in off-shore waters.

But the report cautioned that its findings were not meant to predict that such growth would, in fact, be achieved, but only that it is technically possible. And it acknowledged "there are significant costs, challenges and impacts" associated with such rapid growth.

If wind energy's share of power production grows to 20 percent, natural gas consumption is expected to decline by 11 percent and coal consumption by 18 percent in 2030, said the report. As a result carbon dioxide emissions linked to global warming would be reduced by 825 million metric tons a year.

Graduating?
ORDER A COMMENCEMENT DVD
BROUGHT TO YOU BY:
UVC TV 19
visit www.umass.edu/uvctv19 for more details
or call 413-545-1283

Free copies of jubilat
a national literary magazine published here on campus
To get your copy, come by Bartlett 482 or write us a line jubilat@english.umass.edu
(www.jubilat.org)
ALUMNI

Thursday, May 15th
9 pm to Midnight in all DCs
MIDNIGHT BUFFET
A FABULOUS MENU FEATURING:
Omelet Bar
Fresh Fruit Salad
Chicken Tenders
Dim Sum
Vegetarian Lo Mein
Chocolate Peanut Butter
Cheesecake
UMass Bottled Water
Gourmet Pizza
(including whole wheat)
Chocolate Cake
Nature Burger
Fortune Cookies
Spring Rolls
Cobb Salad
Starbucks Coffee
TAKE A BREAK FROM STUDYING AND JOIN THE CROWD FOR YOUR FAVORITE SPECIAL!
DINING SERVICES
UMass Amherst
2007 Grand Prize
umass.edu/diningservices

FREE* LOCAL DELIVERY, REMOVAL & SET UP
FREE*
FREE*
WITH ANY MATTRESS PURCHASE
Sealy
Serta
*FROM SHOWROOM ONLY. FUTON MATTRESS NOT INCLUDED. ONE FREE OFFER PER PURCHASE WHILE SUPPLIES LAST.
WWW.DIRECTDISCOUNTMATTRESS.COM
0% FINANCING AVAILABLE
SEE STORE FOR DETAILS
HOURS
413-253-
DISCOUNT MATTRESS

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, MAY 13, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

American empire

Jonathon Morris

The American Republic, the flickering flame of freedom, justice, liberty and the guaranteed right for the pursuit of happiness by the land owning class, was extinguished the day the National Security Act was wrought into existence on July 26, 1947. The day the American Empire was born.

After Stalingrad fell, the unending resource of Soviet manpower poured westward, and when Berlin was taken by the Soviets, the American powers that be recognized an incredible opportunity to sell the biggest rip-off in history to the American public.

When the dust had settled, the American industries that had emerged from the ruins of World War II got hungry. Fat government contracts to build all sorts of patriotic Nazi slaughtering toys had fattened up their scrawny frames, so long deprived by the Great Depression.

It was the dawn of a new age; there was work to be had, bustling business and Americans had the means to employ. But with no more Nazis to fight, no more Japs were needed to blow up people and their houses and their crops and their lands and their capitols.

New Nazis were needed and in a brilliant coup of reason, the powers that be, those who own the most money, which means those who get the fattest government contracts, decided to wage war on communism.

It was ingenious, because any sensible person knows that communism isn't an actual tangible entity, but an idea. Waging war on communism is almost as silly as waging war on terrorism.

Anyways, it was decided we would go to war with the Boogey Man because he is everywhere and nowhere at once – clearly a clever fellow. Either way, the industries that discovered building things that blow things up was really profitable when there was a war, and this contributed greatly to politician's campaigns.

In return, the politicians blew things up. And so, the military-industrial complex reared its ugly head and declared war on the ideas that threatened the liberties and freedoms of American citizens.

Citizens owned large estates and led luxurious tax-free lives, afraid that the Marxists would try to take their money away but not scared enough to build themselves bomb shelters. That would take away from tennis time.

And then our first and very own commie-killing president signed away the republic, guaranteed by the Constitution, and instead fashioned the National Security State. It promised to protect the innocence of the American people from those evil powers that lurk in the dangerous world beyond our shores, determined to crush our free markets and steal our politicians' and CFOs' real estate.

Waging war on communism is almost as silly as waging war on terrorism.

In one brilliant stroke, America lost her republic and entered the birthing pains of an empire. Truman's signing of the National Security Act created the National Security Council. It was a cabal consisting of the secretary of defense and the secretary of state.

It was designed to crunch out foreign policy that maximized the security of the homeland that was under constant threat from the neo-Mongol hordes spreading their devil ideas of atheism and collective farming across Eurasia.

The moment the council met, American foreign policy became a euphemism for the agenda of national security. The defense industries all rejoiced. Now all parties were satisfied, and the politicians stayed in power due to the money funneled into their campaigns and pockets by the defense industries.

In turn, the defense industries got their wars and their fat contracts which in turn went back to the politicians and their campaigns. The American public was kept in perpetual fear of the Boogey Man, poised to lob nukes at their nice suburban homes.

And so America triumphantly charged to protect third-world countries that were already pretty occupied with farming rice paddies from the evil barbarian hordes. Proxy wars aimed at legitimizing and satisfying the appetites of the military industrial empire were fought in jungle villages by Americans unable to afford college degrees.

These Americans protected the rights of their fellow corporate magnates –the rights to fix stock prices and embezzle government contracts while their puppet politicians belched bellicose rhetoric and enjoyed fat war chests.

The war chests fueled their campaigns against the communist boogey men trying to infiltrate American politics. People were blacklisted, lives were shattered, and Joe McCarthy died in a gutter, with bottle in hand, from a rotten liver.

And so now, we thank our government for yet another war. It only makes sense. With defense industries running massive amounts of money from the federal government, an unholy marriage has emerged.

The flow of money from grubby politicians' hands to grubby corporate hands has been controlling public and foreign policy since the creation of the National Security state in 1947.

As a result all common sense and reason has been way laid for the protection of the National Security State. The powers that be have no interest in letting down the command of the empire.

It thrives because of the American people's imagination stoked by the corporate media. The result is that America has a nasty habit of conjuring up monsters abroad, and then blowing up a lot of innocent people. It's a savage system the empire has perfected, because it's those imaginary monsters that put food on the empire's tanks.

Jonathon Morris is a UMass graduate. He can be reached at jonathonmorris86@yahoo.com.

Reflecting on Egypt

Greg Collins

In contemplating what anecdotes to write about for my final diary entry from Egypt, one moment stuck out in my mind. When I took my English class of refugees out to eat at a local café a month ago, our discussion turned to the Iraq War.

I explained to Hussain, one of the Iraqi students, that much debate had circulated in American intellectual circles about the sectarian, religious and political strife that had plagued the country.

I asked him, as someone directly influenced by the war, whether newspapers, politicians and religious demagogues label him accurately, and whether he identifies himself as an Iraqi, Shiite, or perhaps something else. He penetrated my eyes and said, "I am Muslim. Not Sunni, not Shiite, but Muslim."

As I reflect upon my study abroad experience in Egypt and traveling throughout the Middle East, this moment epitomized one of the central problems facing the region today.

How do Middle East regimes reconcile the importance of promoting a public identity, whether it is religious, political, or ethnic affiliation, while upholding the liberty, dignity and diversity of the individual?

In this sense, it is easy to overlook governmental imposition of religion in the Middle East today, by passing the practice off as a mere cultural difference between Arab countries and America.

But some Muslim governments paint a depressingly bleak picture of Muslim individuals. Those governments feel that Islam will not be practiced properly if it is not imposed by a public institution.

Regimes in Egypt, Jordan, Palestine and, to a lesser extent, Israel – all of whom have strong theocratic elements within their governments – forget that religion reflects first and foremost a personal relationship between man and a higher spiritual power.

Muslim Arab countries need to embrace the power they do possess to encourage free markets, religion and thought.

This connection is more important than any bond linking fellow human beings with each other, for it manifests the essence of a human being's intrinsic dignity within the context of eternity.

Yet religious imposition by governments directly rejects this notion by suggesting that individuals are not capable of finding this relationship with God without coercion from other human beings.

Similarly along these lines, governmental control of economic, social and political structures further advances the underlying belief inherent in power-seeking regimes that Muslims are not capable of making rational, responsible and spiritual decisions on their own.

This thinking needs to change if Middle Eastern countries want to lessen the influence of the West and enhance their own influence over globalization in a positive and peaceful way.

Directing their anger at Western imperialism, the rise of Israel and a materialistic culture in general, all of which have undoubtedly had both positive and detrimental effects in the Middle East, will not aid Muslim Arab countries in encouraging free markets, religion and thought.

The first step is to change the institutional structures of oppressive regimes. The final and most significant step is for citizens – spanning politicians, religious leaders, businessmen, academics, students and wage-earners – to change their own internal mindsets in order to cherish and promote such liberty. To do anything less would be contrary to Islam and religion.

In general, the memories I hold from living in Egypt and traveling around the region will cling to my mind and heart forever. Gawking at the pyramids, sleeping in deserts with Bedouins, eating seafood in Alexandria, bargaining with Arabs at marketplaces, trying to speak Arabic to my Egyptian friends and drinking fresh orange juice in the West Bank liberated my mindset from the shackles of stereotypes perpetrated largely by the media, politicians and religious demagogues.

Yet more important were the personal interactions I had with people which truly showed the potential for change in the Middle East. Seeing refugees undertake the difficult task of learning English, talking with Palestinian business owners in the West Bank, befriending hard-working Egyptians studying medicine and engineering and marveling at students concentrating on their studies while their families live in danger in the Gaza Strip – all represent the seeds for an enormous potential for growth in a region that is quite capable of growing.

The most autocratic government or imperious militant claiming to rule or fight in the name of God, justice or resistance would not be able to stifle this thirst for internal transformation and individual dignity.

This is why no one can tell Hussain who he is. As he says, he is a Muslim.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu.

Political party hopping

Shayna Murphy

A few months ago, Mike Gravel was just another politician vying for the endorsement of the Democratic Party in the 2008 presidential election.

You've probably never heard of him, but those who have know him to be a man of interesting politics. Arguably, those politics got a lot more interesting on March 25 when, after suffering defeat in the primaries, the former Alaskan senator changed his tune.

Citing a disconnect between the objectives of the Democratic Party and the needs of the mass populous, Gravel cast his relationship with the party to the wayside.

What for? Well, maybe it was fear of another primary blowout that did him in. Or maybe, after having served decades as a one-party kind of guy, Gravel did it in a bout of political wanderlust.

Either way, Mike Gravel is a Libertarian now.

But what is a libertarian, anyway? As unknown to some as the candidate himself, libertarianism makes for a strange choice of conversion, especially for a politician rallying to remain relevant in the 2008 election.

As the largest third party organization in the states, libertarianism has a bad rep for catering to hipsters, radicals, and other assorted loons. Founded in 1971 as a response to the economic policies of the Nixon administration, the party actually owes more to the classic liberalism of the Jeffersonian age than to any other source.

It's all states' rights over the power of the federal government. Since the Jeffersonian era, the issues have expanded socially and economically. In foreign policy, this translates to non-interventionism. On the home front, the party maintains the protection of individual rights and freedoms.

And this compliments Gravel's platform immensely. He advocates the National Initiative for Democracy, a direct democracy policy that would allow citizens to vote on legislation through the use of wide-scale ballot initiatives.

To some, the reform may seem as dubious as the idea of a libertarian takeover.

While the party aims to hedge the hegemony of the two-party system, its more radical tenets – abolishing welfare and giving everyone access to guns – tends to make most folks a little nervous.

But still, that hasn't stopped libertarianism from haunting the current system like the ghost of political conscience past.

And during this election cycle, things have been different. A handful of individuals have been on hand to battle for the candidacy of the party, including Gravel, and including the widely popular Ron Paul.

We have to ask ourselves, what kind of precedent does it set when politicians jump ship to another ideology mid-election season?

Because of this, it's tough to say where Gravel stands. Even by Libertarian standards, he enters the race overshadowed, the aura of celebrity surrounding Ron Paul too impregnable at this point to be breached easily by an obscure outsider.

This doesn't mean that all hope is lost, especially since Paul isn't even an official candidate of the Libertarian party yet. But it does mean that Gravel faces an uphill trek if his hopes of wrestling away the nomination are to bear success.

Beyond Gravel, a larger question looms over this seemingly nonchalant example of party-hopping. We have to ask ourselves, what kind of precedent does it set when politicians jump ship to another ideology mid-election season?

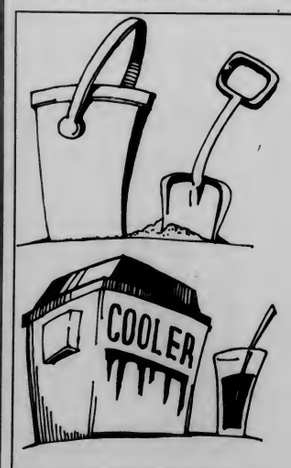
Coming from Gravel, it may seem harmless – forgettable campaign trail fodder, even, until a politician less innocuous than he tries a similar move.

For instance, trailing Obama in popular polls and in delegates, what would happen if Hillary began campaigning as a Libertarian? Obama fans may rejoice, but then they'd gulp. Hillary, take two?

Party-hopping is easier to swallow coming from an obscure source. After all, what hope does an obscure source have of stealing the election? But the horrors such a reversal could reap would be plenty if played out in the wrong hands.

As we head into a summer filled with convention anxieties and general nomination woes, there's too much to potentially worry about as it is without factoring in the fear that the candidates we disregard now will return to the race, ad nauseam, until they win the election.

Popular elections are set in place for a reason; the beauty of democracy isn't just that it lends a voice to the people. Democracy is also about distinguishing, clearly, which candidates the public prefers, and which ones they think ought to get the hell out of Dodge.



True, the public isn't always conclusive. Indiana says yes to another Clinton in the White House, while North Carolina suggests something contrary.

But overall, the public has spoken out. Politicians, high or low, aren't nullifying these voices by switching their parties. They're just exposing how unabashedly calculated the election race has become in between.

As for Gravel, the authenticity of his conversion is something we have to take with the usual grain of skepticism. It could be said, though, that no one really converts to libertarianism expecting a big victory. Idealism, disenchantment, or lark – all of those reasons work fine.

But a big victory? That may be as crazy as running for president in the first place.

Shayna Murphy is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at skmurphy@student.umass.edu.

Shovel out your ideas this summer for the BACK TO SCHOOL issue. It's way cooler that way.

Join the ED/OP team Fall 2008

Editorial@dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, MAY 13, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Summer knights of movie magic

"Speed Racer"
Release: May 9
Starring: Emile Hirsch, Christina Ricci, John Goodman

"The Chronicles of Narnia: Prince Caspian"
Release: May 16
Starring: Ben Barnes, William Moseley

"Indiana Jones and the Kingdom of the Crystal Skull"
Release: May 22
Starring: Harrison Ford, Shia LaBoeuf, Cate Blanchett

"Sex and the City: The Movie"
Release: May 30
Starring: Sarah Jessica Parker, Chris Noth

"You Don't Mess with the Zohan"
Release: June 6
Starring: Adam Sandler, Rob Schneider

"The Mother of Tears"
Release: June 6
Starring: Asia Argento, Moran Atias

"The Happening"
Release: June 13
Starring: Mark Wahlberg, Zooey Deschanel

"The Incredible Hulk"
Release: June 13
Starring: Edward Norton, Liv Tyler, Tim Roth

"The Love Guru"
Release: June 20
Starring: Mike Meyers, Jessica Alba

"Get Smart"
Release: June 20

"Wall-E"
Release: June 27
Voices: Sigourney Weaver, Kathy Najimy

"Wanted"
Release: June 27
Starring: James McAvoy, Angelina Jolie

"Hancock"
Release: July 2
Starring: Will Smith, Jason Bateman

"Hellboy II: The Golden Army"
Release: July 11
Starring: Ron Perlman, Selma Blair

"The Dark Knight"
Release: July 18
Starring: Heath Ledger, Christian Bale, Maggie Gyllenhaal

"X-Files: I Want to Believe"
Release: July 25
Starring: David Duchovny, Gillian Anderson

"The Mummy: Tomb of the Dragon Emperor"
Release: Aug 1
Starring: Brendan Fraser, Maria Bello

"The Pineapple Express"
Release: August 8
Starring: Seth Rogen, James Franco

"Tropic Thunder"
Release: August 15
Starring: Ben Stiller, Robert Downey Jr., Jack Black

"Vicky Cristina Barcelona"
Release: August 29
Starring: Penelope Cruz, Javier Bardem, Scarlett Johansson

Collegian arts staff previews the upcoming film season

BY ARTS STAFF
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As the semester dwindles down to a flurry of hasty goodbyes and off-the-cuff final papers, we of the arts and living section of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian are thinking ahead to the grand beyond. Summer, with its infinite possibilities, doesn't just provide the chance to gorge on Dad's burnt barbeque and PBR-fueled beach bonfires – it's also home to the season film fans of all ages look forward to most. It is the season of the summer blockbuster.

With audience favorites Indiana Jones and Carrie Bradshaw making long-awaited returns and Heath Ledger building buzz as the Joker in the upcoming "Dark Knight," it's all we can do to keep from pacing. How else have we managed to deal with our excitement? By assembling a preview of the most anticipated films the summer has to offer.

"Speed Racer"

Oh boy, oh Wachowski brothers. By the time this preview finds you, "Speed Racer" will have already made the leap to the silver screen, with the brothers trailing not too far behind. The fearsome duo returns for another crack at directing, this time with a live-action version of the 1960s Japanese cartoon "Speed Racer."

Their first venture since the ill-fated "Matrix" trilogy, the film's swirling colors and dazzling gadgetry replicate the experience of being dipped into a vat of candy. But as storytelling goes, the Wachowski brothers prove they still haven't bested the learning curve.

The cast has its heavy hitters, but the story loses out to the style. As Speed, Emile Hirsch grounds the fast-moving plot in some reality, yet his kid brother and his pet chimp make for the most annoying on-screen presence since Jar Jar Binks in Episode I.

COURTESY WARNER BROTHERS

"The Chronicles of Narnia: Prince Caspian"

Hitting theatres this Friday is the long-awaited sequel to the 2005 box-office smash "The Chronicles of Narnia," based on the series of fantasy novels written by acclaimed author C.S. Lewis. The Pevensie siblings are magically transported back to Narnia from England. Upon their arrival, an even greater test of courage and faith awaits the children, as they come to realize 1,300 years have passed in Narnian time. The Telmarines have conquered Narnia and evil King Miraz has been appointed to rule the land.

The children meet a new character, Prince Caspian, who has been forced into hiding as his uncle, King Miraz, wants to kill him and appoint his own son as predecessor to the throne. Peter and Prince Caspian then embark on a mission to seek out Aslan and salvage their precious Narnia. Fans are jumping out of their skin in anticipation and with hopes for more jam-packed action-adventure sequences.

"Indiana Jones and the Kingdom of the Crystal Skull"

It's been almost 20 years since the last Indy installment, "The Last Crusade," was released in theaters. Steven Spielberg has since gone on to win Oscars, but that hasn't dimmed his affection for the serial-inspired franchise.

Set in 1959, the film pits Indy against new adversaries: the Soviet Union. Cate Blanchett is on hand to star as the film's bob cut-sporting villain Irina Spalko, who seeks the power of the crystal skull of Akator. Guarded by an army of the undead, legend supposes that the skull grants ultimate power.

Fans dismissive of Ford's age should recall Sean Connery in "The Last Crusade," who more than kept up with the younger competition. As insurance, the studio has recruited Shia LeBeouf, just in case the sexagenarian fails to capture the interest of that coveted young adult demographic. Indy's "Raiders" love interest, played by Karen Allen, also resurfaces.

But of greater risk than age or hackneyed adventures, the perils of commercialism await. Burger King, Dr. Pepper and Mars are all advertising with the Indiana name. While it's easy to disparage such cheap endorsement, at least we can say the mint M&Ms and coconut Indiana Jones-inspired candy bars sound scrumptious.

"Sex and the City: The Movie"

The fab four are back. No, not the Beatles. Carrie (Sarah Jessica Parker), Samantha (Kim Cattrall), Charlotte (Kristin Davis) and Miranda (Cynthia Nixon) return, setting their Manolos to the streets of New York once more in the big-screen version of the HBO series. Trouble may have lurked behind the scenes, but that's all in the past.

From trailers, we can gauge that Big leaves Carrie at the altar, forcing our favorite sex columnist to reconsider romance in the Big Apple. Meanwhile, Charlotte gets her long-awaited baby, and Oscar winner Jennifer Hudson joins the cast as Carrie's personal assistant. But with more details come more questions. Does Mr. Big die? Does Steve really cheat on Miranda? Is Samantha finally going to settle down? In this the chick flick to end all chick flicks? Plenty of "what ifs" abound.

"You Don't Mess with the Zohan"

Could a movie that has Adam Sandler playing an Israeli secret agent turned hairstylist be the big return to form we've all been waiting for? Well only time will tell but if the movie is half as funny as the preview looks, it has the potential to be one of the funniest Sandler movies since the Backstreet Boys were still selling albums.

Armed with his usual cast of characters, including Rob Schneider and Henry Winkler (as himself, of course), this premise might just straddle the line between tasteful and tasteless enough to be a crowd pleaser. Dennis Dugan takes the directing duties for the second Sandler film in a row after last year's "I Now Pronounce You Chuck and Larry," and hopefully this movie will improve upon that collaboration, which was mildly amusing at best. Worst-case scenario, this movie may be a "Zoolander" rehash that could burst Sandler's comeback balloon.

"The Mother of Tears"

Italian Master of Horror Dario Argento is back this June with the final installment in his "Three Mothers" trilogy, the first two being 1977's "Suspiria" and 1980s "Inferno."

The somewhat obscure Argento is known for his gory, supernatural horror. He aims to shock the viewer with disturbing amounts and types of violence and in this case, liberal amounts of nudity in the form of model Moran Atias, the titular mother.

Also starring is the director's daughter, Asia, who plays Sarah, the unwitting victim of Atias' evil witch and her followers. Sarah must find a way to stop the Mother of Tears from taking over the world, after the unearthing of a vase in Rome leads to her resurrection. The only real horror movie of the summer, the film is sure to provide a healthy dose of slashing and screaming for the horror-junkies among us, at least for those who live near a city where they can catch it – it's slated for limited release throughout the summer.

COURTESY PARAMOUNT PICTURES

"The Happening"

The fall from grace has been slow for M. Night Shyamalan, but let there be no bones about it: the once-mighty director has fallen. Thrust into the mainstream following the success of 1999's "The Sixth Sense," each subsequent film has proven lesser than the one before it. While "Signs" is an acquired taste – some people love it, others think it's contrived – the universally reviled "Lady in the Water" set M. Night's detractors scrambling en masse to take a bite out of the once acclaimed suspense magician. One twist pony? Could be.

Shyamalan aims for Hitchcock, but by now we all know the secret to his plot sphinxes. But maybe, just maybe, he's still got a few tricks up his sleeve. And maybe the tale of a science teacher (Mark Wahlberg) waiting out the effects of a global pandemic will be the one to prove it.

"The Incredible Hulk"

Anything promises to be better than the 2003 original starring Eric Bana and Jennifer Connelly. By trailers, at least this entry seems aware that it's a superhero movie, not "The Caucasian Chalk Circle." But the recast of Edward Norton in the title role suggests this won't be just your average popcorn flick, either.

After failing to find a cure for his condition in South America, Bruce Banner (Norton) continues on as a fugitive from the U.S. military. This time around, he's got bigger things to worry about than capture and quarantine. Tim Roth joins the cast as the Abomination – a former soldier turned mutant mega-Hulk whose rage against Banner knows no bounds. As the two Hulks battle it out, Marvel fans should keep a look out for another Marvel superhero to make his way onscreen. Namely, one in iron.

COURTESY MARVEL ENTERTAINMENT

"The Love Guru"

In his first original character since the third installment of "Austin Powers," Mike Myers plays Pitka, an American who was abandoned at the gates of ashram in India as a youngster and raised by gurus. Pitka decides to venture back to the United States in hopes of succeeding in the realm of self-help and spirituality.

His conscience is put to the ultimate test when he is forced to settle a scuffle between the Toronto Maple Leaf's star hockey player, Darren Roanke (Romany Malco) and his estranged wife. After the couple's split, Roanoke's wife begins to date L.A. Kings star Jacques Grande (Justin Timberlake) out of revenge. As a result, Roanoke heads into a career slump, evoking horror onto the Toronto Maple Leaf owner's Jane Bullard (Jessica Alba) and Coach Cherkov (Verne Troyer).

It's Pitka's task to get Roanoke back on his game and lead his team on the path to taking the Stanley Cup. Expectations are not high, as Mike Myers' cliche comedic routine became sore to the average movie-goer's eye after "The Spy Who Shagged Me" and could only utter a grunt come "Goldmember."

"Get Smart"

Agent Maxwell Smart is on a mission to put a halt to the latest plot for world domination, courtesy of the evil crime syndicate KAOS. When the headquarters of U.S. spy agency CONTROL is attacked, compromising the identities of all of its agents, the chief (Alan Arkin) is faced with the less-than-pleasing decision to appoint Maxwell Smart.

It has long been Smart's dream to work in the field among the action and robust Agent 23 (Dwayne "The Rock" Johnson). He is teamed up with the sassy-yet-striking Agent 99 (Anne Hathaway). The duo seek out to complete their mission of squashing Siegfried (Terence Stamp), head of KAOS,

See SUMMER MOVIES on page 6

Heroes and robots and villians, oh my

SUMMER MOVIES from page 5

and his evil conspiracy.

Despite its corny exterior, let's give Carrell the benefit of the doubt. "The Office" star has heaps of comedic talent and one can only hope he encompasses that genius this summer in "Get Smart."

"Wall-E"

Pixar's offering this summer's return to the familiar territory of inanimate objects, but instead of cars, this time around it's robots. "Wall-E," written and directed by Andrew Stanton (who also did "Finding Nemo"), is the tale of a lonely robot who is left on Earth when all the humans leave for greener pastures.

For the past several centuries, Wall-E has been dutifully picking up trash and collecting tchotchkes, with only a cockroach for companionship, until he encounters a girl robot named EVE and promptly falls in love. He follows EVE back to her mother ship, where he meets a whole slew of robots, as well as the remaining humans, who have been living in space since leaving Terra Firma.

"Wall-E" promises to be just as adorable as Pixar's previous films such as "Monsters Inc." and "The Incredibles," but this film has a bit of a twist: there's almost no dialog. The robots communicate using beeps, which is no surprise, since the sound designer also created the voice of R2-D2. Like most of Pixar's movies, this is an underdog story with an uplifting message, but even if the fare is familiar, the film is sure to be just as enjoyable as the other hits in the Pixar Pantheon.

"Wanted"

These days it wouldn't be summer without a film based on a graphic novel. Following in the tradition of "Sin City" and "300" is "Wanted," based on the book by Mark Millar.

James McAvoy plays a cubical-dwelling Everyman who joins a mysterious, esoteric group of assassins known as the Fraternity. There, the aptly named Fox, played by Angelina Jolie, trains him to be a swift, slick dealer of death, with the help of Morgan Freeman's sagely leader Sloan and the other assassins. Wes the Everyman learns how to unlock his inner strength to avenge his father's death, and ends up discovering how to take control of his own destiny, the force which gives the Fraternity its orders.

"Wanted" is full of potential: the director, Timur Bekmambetov, is wildly successful in Russia, and while the casting of Morgan Freeman as a wise old mentor and Angelina Jolie as a sexy bad-ass babe is a little obvious, it will be interesting to see James McAvoy, previously known for his work in films like "The Lion, the Witch, and the Wardrobe," "The Last King of Scotland," and "Atonement" take on an action role.

"Hancock"

Will Smith has never been a superhero, but he has battled the likes of aliens, vampires and Martin Lawrence. He makes his first formal superhero turn as Hancock but his hero is anything but ordinary. An alcoholic mess of superpower with the ability to deflect bullets and fly, he's more rogue than a pillar of law and justice. Jason Bateman, of "Arrested Development," plays a publicist recruited by Hancock to help fix his shaky public image.

So the question is, in a summer filled with comic book-certified heroes, can Smith's Hancock hold his own? With no mythology to pull from and no arch-nemesis to speak of, can film's sole joke be enough to sustain a full film?

"Hellboy II: The Golden Army"

Guillermo del Toro tries to keep his momentum, running after the success of "Pan's Labyrinth" with "Hellboy II" this summer. The first "Hellboy" was a catastrophe of a movie. The movie barely moves and the characters feel plastic and hollow. But hope is still alive for the comic made movie.

Ron Pearlman returns and Toro has the financial backing, after the success of "Pan's Labyrinth," to have all the CGI special effects he would like. The movie shows del Toro's talent as a makeup and special effects artist.

The major downfall in first film appears to be the same for the second – the movie has far too many characters restricting development. The monsters crashing in left and right create a washer-machine effect, people getting lost in the shuffle. The movie is about Hellboy (Ron Pearlman looking like a human finally) fighting off a rebellion from the mythical world.

"The Dark Knight"

Here's the one to watch. Hollywood's No. 4 hitter in this summer's starting lineup. The buzz has already been growing and will likely continue, as there is already talk of a posthumous Oscar for Ledger's Joker.

As anyone who has seen the trailer already knows this movie would have been Ledger's big break, thrusting him into the elite bunch of actors the likes of Leo DiCaprio and Johnny Depp. Ledger looks like a knockout, his make-up smeared, laughing hysterically as Christian Bale swoops into Gotham City to stop him. Not only does Batman have the Joker on his tail, but Aaron Eckhart also poses a mean threat as one Batman's other notorious villains Two-Face.

My prediction is not even Batman himself could stop this from being one of the most talked-about movies of the year. Let's hope it delivers on its promise and then some as the movie not only needs to be a solid blockbuster, but also a fitting tribute to a young star that died too soon.

"X-Files: I Want to Believe"

"The X-Files" makes its, hopefully, triumphant return this summer with the long-awaited second film of the franchise. Details about the movie are extremely sparse and sketchy.

David Duchovny and Gillian Anderson will reprise their roles as FBI agents Fox Mulder and Dana Scully, but beyond that not much is certain. The story apparently

See SUMMER MOVIES on page 7

NOW OFFERING Cash for Books Prepaid MasterCard!

CASH FOR BOOKS

We're buying your books back at these convenient locations:

Textbook Annex
Monday - Wednesday, May 12 - 14
9am – 4pm
Thursday – Friday, May 15 – 16
9am – 5pm
Saturday, May 17
11am – 4pm
Monday - Wednesday, May 19 - 21
9am – 5pm
Thursday, May 22
9am – 4pm

Campus Center- Concourse
Monday - Wednesday, May 12 - 14
9am – 4pm
Thursday – Friday, May 15 – 16
9am – 5pm
Saturday, May 17
11am – 4pm
Monday - Wednesday, May 19 - 21
9am – 5pm
Thursday, May 22
9am – 2pm

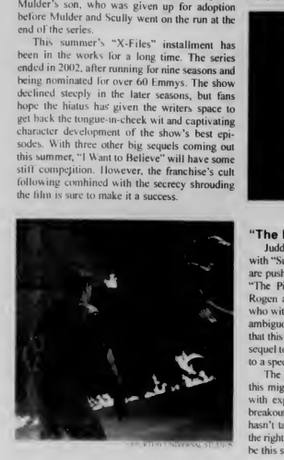
Southwest- Hampden Lobby
Thursday – Friday, May 15 - 16
10am – 5pm
Monday - Wednesday, May 19 - 21
10am – 5pm
Thursday, May 22
10am – 1pm

UMASS AMHERST University of Massachusetts
University Store and Textbook Annex
Amherst Campus Center • 413-545-2619

efollett.com ONLINE. ON CAMPUS.

790

STUDENT RELAXES FOR ELEVEN STRAIGHT MINUTES!
NAMEintheNEWS.COM



Big laughs and action for the silver screen

SUMMER MOVIES from page 6

hearkens back to the early days of the TV show, with mysterious disappearances and a priest whose visions may hold the key to solving the mystery. The official site contains no plot details whatsoever and a single, extremely vague trailer.

However, writer/director/series creator Chris Carter promises that the new movie will remain true to the mythology of the series and the first film. He has also said that one of the subplots of "I Want to Believe," will deal with Scully and Mulder's son, who was given up for adoption before Mulder and Scully went on the run at the end of the series.

This summer's "X-Files" installment has been in the works for a long time. The series ended in 2002, after running for nine seasons and being nominated for over 60 Emmys. The show declined steeply in the later seasons, but fans hope the hiatus has given the writers space to get back the tongue-in-cheek wit and captivating character development of the show's best episodes. With three other big sequels coming out this summer, "I Want to Believe" will have some stiff competition. However, the franchise's cult following combined with the secrecy shrouding the film is sure to make it a success.

"The Mummy: Tomb of the Dragon Emperor"

Joining the ranks of the summer sequel crowd is the newest installment in the "Mummy" franchise. Brendan Fraser returns as the rogue explorer with John Hannah reprising his role as the dopey sidekick, this time journeying to China, new stomping grounds for the franchise, which previously focused on Egypt.

This chapter depicts Fraser traveling to the Far East with his now-grown son, who was last seen as a little boy in 2001's "The Mummy Returns." Rachel Weisz is out, supposedly because she wouldn't play the mother of a 21-year-old; Maria Bello is in. Jet Li plays the titular Mummy, accompanied by the famous Terra Cotta Army.

Following in the tradition established in "The Mummy Returns," the plot goes back and forth between the current mayhem and the ancient events which led up to them. Also following in the steps of that film, it is once again young Alex who unleashes the villainous mummy, who is once again bent on world domination.

In a summer full of rehashings, reimaginings and revivals, it's not clear whether we really need another Mummy movie, especially one without Rachel Weisz. Perhaps new-to-the-franchise director Rob Cohen can inject some new life into the series. Even if it's only on-par with the previous "Mummy" films, "Tomb of the Dragon Emperor" should be fun and enjoyable.

"The Pineapple Express"

Judd Apatow had his major breakout last August with "Superbad," which is probably why producers are pushing an August release for his latest movie, "The Pineapple Express." The movie stars Seth Rogen and James Franco as a stoner and dealer who witness a murder and must go on the run. The ambiguous title might mislead you into thinking that this might be some type of western, or worse, a sequel to "The Polar Express," but it actually refers to a specific type of refer featured in the movie.

The preview is enough to spark thoughts that this might finally be the definitive Apatow movie, with explosions abound, all set to this summer's breakout hit "Paper Planes" by M.I.A. Apatow hasn't taken a swing and missed yet, and with all the right pieces seemingly in place this movie might be this summer's sleeper blockbuster.

"Tropic Thunder"

The winds of fortune are blowing well for Tropic Thunder as it looks like it could be one the summer's biggest comedy smashes. Ben Stiller takes directing credits for the first time since his cult classic "Zoolander" and with a plot equally as ridiculous, here's to hoping the formula will make for similar results.

Stiller and Jack Black star in this screwball comedy about actors starring in a Vietnam movie. The only twist is they've been dropped into real combat and are forced into becoming the real soldiers that they were supposed to be playing. Black and Stiller haven't collaborated as major stars yet in a motion picture but the real scene stealer could be Robert Downey Jr. The actor coming off one of the summer's big box office winners, "Iron Man," plays a white actor who has a skin graft surgery to play a black military sergeant. Offensive? Maybe. Hilarious? We'll see.

"Vicky Cristina Barcelona"

Lately, Woody Allen's been hit or miss. The 2005 dark morality tale "Match Point" put the legendary director back on top. Yet Allen's follow-ups have failed to capitalize on the momentum – both the forgettable "Scoop" and the underrated "Cassandra's Dream" being passed over by popular audiences. It's with great excitement that he releases his latest film, starring Javier Bardem and Penelope Cruz as a pair of exes working through some sexual hangups. Set in Barcelona, rather than Allen's usual Manhattan, the film promises more eroticism than films past. Reportedly, the film features sex scenes between Cruz, Bardem and Allen's latest muse, Scarlett Johansson.

The arts staff can be reached at arts@dailycollegian.com.

Collegian Summer Picks

Oscar Nod: Heath Ledger, "The Dark Knight," Best Supporting Actor

Most Anticipated: Draw, "Indiana Jones" and "The Dark Knight"

Best Film: "Dark Knight"

Best Comedy: "Get Smart"

Best Comic/Graphic Novel: "The Dark Knight"

Best Fantasy–Based: "The Chronicles of Narnia: Prince Caspian"

Best sequel: "Indiana Jones"

Best Chick Flick: "Sex and the City: The Movie"

Best Animated Feature: "WALL–E"

Best Comeback: Robert Downey Jr.

Break Through Performance: William Moseley, "The Chronicles of Narnia"

Under the Radar: "Vicky Cristina Barcelona"

Avoid at all costs: "The Love Guru"

Dream Higher

Need More Space?
LOFT BEDS
BUNK BEDS
Twin-Full-Queen
866-739-2331
CollegeBedLofts.com

A message from the Ed/op editor SP:

Come gather 'round people,
Come gather 'round friends
I come from a place
Where the sidewalk ends

I come with a message
I come here to say
Apply for Arts!
Apply today!

Smith College School for Social Work
OPEN HOUSE
for MSW & PhD programs
Monday, June 9, 2008
Campus Center
Noon–5:00 pm
To register, please call the Office of Admission at 413-585-7960 or email to sswadm@email.smith.edu
Smith College School for Social Work
Office of Admission, Lilly Hall
Northampton, Massachusetts 01063
Tel: 413-585-7960
E-mail: sswadm@email.smith.edu
www.smith.edu/ssw

HATS OFF TO GRADUATES!
COME CELEBRATE WITH US AT Salem Cross Inn
— RESTAURANT —
Great food, Great setting, Great time! Call now to book your reservation!
Groups of any size welcome!
(508) 867-2345
www.salemcrossinn.com

Got trash?
Dump your apartment cleanout garbage in the right place:
Bring your student ID to get in!
The Amherst Transfer Station
Trash, furniture, mattresses, TVs, computers & appliances accepted
Disposal fees apply
740 Belchertown Road (Route 9), 2 miles East of Dunkin Doughnuts
Open 8am-2pm Tuesdays, Thursdays, & Saturdays
For more information, visit www.amherstma.gov/recycling or call the Amherst Dept. of Public Works 413-259-3050

YOUR ONE STOP SHOP FOR PARTY SUPPLIES & EQUIPMENT RENTALS!
CARPET CLEANERS • CHAIRS • WALLPAPER STEAMER • TABLES • TENTS • GLASSWARE
TJ's www.taylorrental.com/hadley
TAYLOR RENTAL
Party Plus
577 Granby Rd. Rt. 202, SOUTH HADLEY 413-533-5503
Rt 9 301 Russell St HADLEY 413-584-4184
WE SELL MOVING SUPPLIES

Heroes and robots and villians, oh my

COURTESY PARAMOUNT CO., HBO, WALT DISNEY, WARNER BROTHERS

SUMMER MOVIES from page 5

and his evil conspiracy.

Despite its corny exterior, let's give Carrell the benefit of the doubt. "The Office" star has heaps of comedic talent and one can only hope he encompasses that genius this summer in "Get Smart."

"Wall-E"

Pixar's offering this summer's return to the familiar territory of inanimate objects, but instead of cars, this time around it's robots. "Wall-E," written and directed by Andrew Stanton (who also did "Finding Nemo"), is the tale of a lonely robot who is left on Earth when all the humans leave for greener pastures.

For the past several centuries, Wall-E has been dutifully picking up trash and collecting tchotchkes, with only a cockroach for companionship, until he encounters a girl robot named EVE and promptly falls in love. He follows EVE back to her mother ship, where he meets a whole slew of robots, as well as the remaining humans, who have been living in space since leaving Terra Firma.

"Wall-E" promises to be just as adorable as Pixar's previous films such as "Monsters Inc." and "The Incredibles," but this film has a bit of a twist: there's almost no dialog. The robots communicate using beeps, which is no surprise, since the sound designer also created the voice of R2-D2. Like most of Pixar's movies, this is an underdog story with an uplifting message, but even if the fare is familiar, the film is sure to be just as enjoyable as the other hits in the Pixar Pantheon.

"Wanted"

These days it wouldn't be summer without a film based on a graphic novel. Following in the tradition of "Sin City" and "300" is "Wanted," based on the book by Mark Millar.

James McAvoy plays a cubical-dwelling Everyman who joins a mysterious, esoteric group of assassins known as the Fraternity. There, the aptly named Fox, played by Angelina Jolie, trains him to be a swift, slick dealer of death, with the help of Morgan Freeman's sagely leader Sloan and the other assassins. Wes the Everyman learns how to unlock his inner strength to avenge his father's death, and ends up discovering how to take control of his own destiny, the force which gives the Fraternity its orders.

"Wanted" is full of potential: the director, Timur Bekmambetov, is wildly successful in Russia, and while the casting of Morgan Freeman as a wise old mentor and Angelina Jolie as a sexy bad-ass babe is a little obvious, it will be interesting to see James McAvoy, previously known for his work in films like "The Lion, the Witch, and the Wardrobe," "The Last King of Scotland," and "Atonement" take on an action role.

"Hancock"

Will Smith has never been a superhero, but he has battled the likes of aliens, vampires and Martin Lawrence. He makes his first formal superhero turn as Hancock but his hero is anything but ordinary. An alcoholic mess of superpower with the ability to deflect bullets and fly, he's more rogue than a pillar of law and justice. Jason Bateman, of "Arrested Development," plays a publicist recruited by Hancock to help fix his shaky public image.

So the question is, in a summer filled with comic book-certified heroes, can Smith's Hancock hold his own? With no mythology to pull from and no arch-nemesis to speak of, can film's sole joke be enough to sustain a full film?

"Hellboy II: The Golden Army"

Guillermo del Toro tries to keep his momentum, running after the success of "Pan's Labyrinth" with "Hellboy II" this summer. The first "Hellboy" was a catastrophe of a movie. The movie barely moves and the characters feel plastic and hollow. But hope is still alive for the comic made movie.

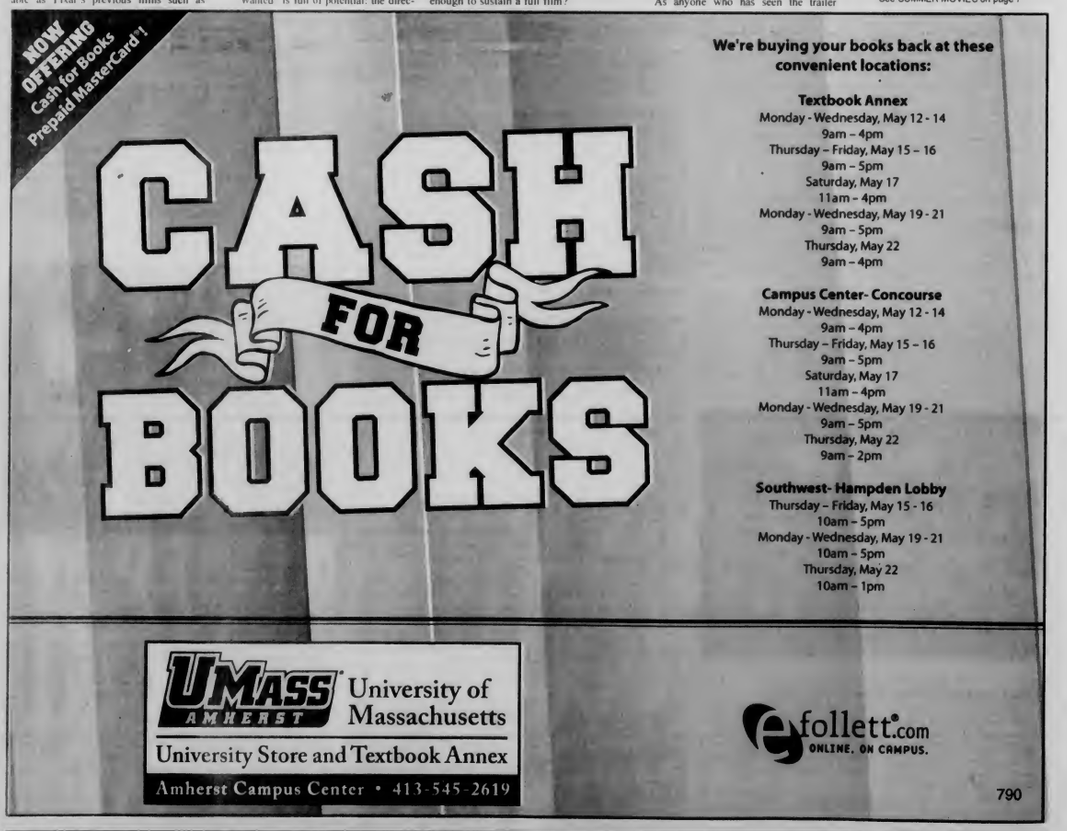
Ron Pearlman returns and Toro has the financial backing, after the success of "Pan's Labyrinth," to have all the CGI special effects he would like. The movie shows del Toro's talent as a makeup and special effects artist.

The major downfall in first film appears to be the same for the second – the movie has far too many characters restricting development. The monsters crashing in left and right create a washer-machine effect, people getting lost in the shuffle. The movie is about Hellboy (Ron Pearlman looking like a human finally) fighting off a rebellion from the mythical world.

"The Dark Knight"

Here's the one to watch. Hollywood's No. 4 hitter in this summer's starting lineup. The buzz has already been growing and will likely continue, as there is already talk of a posthumous Oscar for Ledger's Joker.

As anyone who has seen the trailer already knows this movie would have been Ledger's big break, thrusting him into the elite bunch of actors the likes of Leo DiCaprio and Johnny Depp. Ledger looks like a knockout, his make-up smeared, laughing hysterically as Christian Bale swoops into Gotham City to stop him. Not only does Batman have the Joker on his tail, but Aaron Eckhart also poses a mean threat as one Batman's other notorious villains Two-Face.



My prediction is not even Batman himself could stop this from being one of the most talked-about movies of the year. Let's hope it delivers on its promise and then some as the movie not only needs to be a solid blockbuster, but also a fitting tribute to a young star that died too soon.

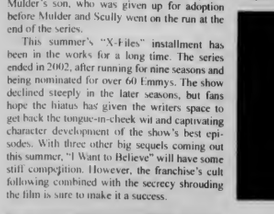
"X-Files: I Want to Believe"

"The X-Files" makes its, hopefully, triumphant return this summer with the long-awaited second film of the franchise. Details about the movie are extremely sparse and sketchy.

David Duchovny and Gillian Anderson will reprise their roles as FBI agents Fox Mulder and Dana Scully, but beyond that not much is certain. The story apparently

See SUMMER MOVIES on page 7

STUDENT RELAXES FOR ELEVEN STRAIGHT MINUTES!
NAMEintheNEWS.COM



Big laughs and action for the silver screen

SUMMER MOVIES from page 6

hearkens back to the early days of the TV show, with mysterious disappearances and a priest whose visions may hold the key to solving the mystery. The official site contains no plot details whatsoever and a single, extremely vague trailer.

However, writer/director/series creator Chris Carter promises that the new movie will remain true to the mythology of the series and the first film. He has also said that one of the subplots of "I Want to Believe," will deal with Scully and Mulder's son, who was given up for adoption before Mulder and Scully went on the run at the end of the series.

This summer's "X-Files" installment has been in the works for a long time. The series ended in 2002, after running for nine seasons and being nominated for over 60 Emmys. The show declined steeply in the later seasons, but fans hope the hiatus has given the writers space to get back the tongue-in-cheek wit and captivating character development of the show's best episodes. With three other big sequels coming out this summer, "I Want to Believe" will have some stiff competition. However, the franchise's cult following combined with the secrecy shrouding the film is sure to make it a success.

COURTESY UNIVERSAL STUDIOS

"The Mummy: Tomb of the Dragon Emperor"

Joining the ranks of the summer sequel crowd is the newest installment in the "Mummy" franchise. Brendan Fraser returns as the rogue explorer with John Hannah reprising his role as the dopey sidekick, this time journeying to China, new stomping grounds for the franchise, which previously focused on Egypt.

This chapter depicts Fraser traveling to the Far East with his now-grown son, who was last seen as a little boy in 2001's "The Mummy Returns." Rachel Weisz is out, supposedly because she wouldn't play the mother of a 21-year-old; Maria Bello is in. Jet Li plays the titular Mummy, accompanied by the famous Terra Cotta Army.

Following in the tradition established in "The Mummy Returns," the plot goes back and forth between the current mayhem and the ancient events which led up to them. Also following in the steps of that film, it is once again young Alex who unleashes the villainous mummy, who is once again bent on world domination.

In a summer full of rehashings, reimaginings and revivals, it's not clear whether we really need another Mummy movie, especially one without Rachel Weisz. Perhaps new-to-the-franchise director Rob Cohen can inject some new life into the series. Even if it's only on par with the previous "Mummy" films, "Tomb of the Dragon Emperor" should be fun and enjoyable.

COURTESY UNIVERSAL STUDIOS

"The Pineapple Express"

Judd Apatow had his major breakout last August with "Superbad," which is probably why producers are pushing an August release for his latest movie, "The Pineapple Express." The movie stars Seth Rogen and James Franco as a stoner and dealer who witness a murder and must go on the run. The ambiguous title might mislead you into thinking that this might be some type of western, or worse, a sequel to "The Polar Express," but it actually refers to a specific type of refer featured in the movie.

The preview is enough to spark thoughts that this might finally be the definitive Apatow movie, with explosions abound, all set to this summer's breakout hit "Paper Planes" by M.I.A. Apatow hasn't taken a swing and missed yet, and with all the right pieces seemingly in place this movie might be this summer's sleeper blockbuster.

"Tropic Thunder"

The winds of fortune are blowing well for Tropic Thunder as it looks like it could be one the summer's biggest comedy smashes. Ben Stiller takes directing credits for the first time since his cult classic "Zoolander" and with a plot equally as ridiculous, here's to hoping the formula will make for similar results.

Stiller and Jack Black star in this screwball comedy about actors starring in a Vietnam movie. The only twist is they've been dropped into real combat and are forced into becoming the real soldiers that they were supposed to be playing. Black and Stiller haven't collaborated as major stars yet in a motion picture but the real scene stealer could be Robert Downey Jr. The actor coming off one of the summer's big box office winners, "Iron Man," plays a white actor who has a skin graft surgery to play a black military sergeant. Offensive? Maybe. Hilarious? We'll see.

COURTESY THE WEINSTEIN COMPANY

"Vicky Cristina Barcelona"

Lately, Woody Allen's been hit or miss. The 2005 dark morality tale "Match Point" put the legendary director back on top. Yet Allen's follow-ups have failed to capitalize on the momentum – both the forgettable "Scoop" and the underrated "Cassandra's Dream" being passed over by popular audiences. It's with great excitement that he releases his latest film, starring Javier Bardem and Penelope Cruz as a pair of exes working through some sexual hangups. Set in Barcelona, rather than Allen's usual Manhattan, the film promises more eroticism than films past. Reportedly, the film features sex scenes between Cruz, Bardem and Allen's latest muse, Scarlett Johansson.

The arts staff can be reached at arts@dailycollegian.com.

Collegian Summer Picks

Oscar Nod: Heath Ledger, "The Dark Knight," Best Supporting Actor

Most Anticipated: Draw, "Indiana Jones" and "The Dark Knight"

Best Film: "Dark Knight"

Best Comedy: "Get Smart"

Best Comic/Graphic Novel: "The Dark Knight"

Best Fantasy–Based: "The Chronicles of Narnia: Prince Caspian"

Best sequel: "Indiana Jones"

Best Chick Flick: "Sex and the City: The Movie"

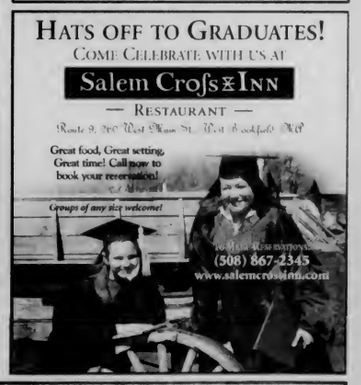
Best Animated Feature: "WALL–E"

Best Comeback: Robert Downey Jr.

Break Through Performance: William Moseley, "The Chronicles of Narnia"

Under the Radar: "Vicky Cristina Barcelona"

Avoid at all costs: "The Love Guru"



A message from the Ed/op editor SP:

Come gather 'round people,
Come gather 'round friends
I come from a place
Where the sidewalk ends

I come with a message
I come here to say
Apply for Arts!
Apply today!

Smith College School for Social Work
OPEN HOUSE
for MSW & PhD programs
Monday, June 9, 2008
Campus Center
Noon–5:00 pm
To register, please call the Office of Admission at 413-585-7960 or email to sswadm@email.smith.edu
Smith College School for Social Work
Office of Admission, Lilly Hall
Northampton, Massachusetts 01063
Tel: 413-585-7960
E-mail: sswadm@email.smith.edu
www.smith.edu/ssw

Got trash?
Dump your apartment cleanout garbage in the right place:
Bring your student ID to get in!
The Amherst Transfer Station
Trash, furniture, mattresses, TVs, computers & appliances accepted
Disposal fees apply
740 Belchertown Road (Route 9), 2 miles East of Dunkin Doughnuts
Open 8am-2pm Tuesdays, Thursdays, & Saturdays
For more information, visit www.amherstma.gov/recycling or call the Amherst Dept. of Public Works 413-259-3050

WE SELL MOVING SUPPLIES

MISTY EYES from page 9

place ever.

Jeff and Melissa - We have to give Eli a hard time. We have a lot of work on our hands. And no matter what Joe says, he sucks.

Steph - Expect many high-fives next year and hopefully we won't be taking mile treks around UMass again.

For all of you who are working below me next semester - I feel so sorry for you. Just go to meetings and put effort into your writing and you'll be fine.

For anyone that I did not mention I apologize, you can hit me later. My time at the Collegian was better than I could have ever expected only because of you. To all of you that are graduating: good luck and may you have luck and good fortune in wherever life takes you.

Melissa Turtinen
Track and Field, Women's Lacrosse

Tanya Harding Charge: Sportswriting while female

I don't even know where to begin… I guess I can start by saying I can't believe it's the end of my junior year of college because I still feel like I should be in seventh grade. In the last two weeks the Collegian has become my second home and I wasn't sure if I thought that was going to be a good thing, but it totally is. I'm still the only girl writing for sports and I'm proud to be the "affirmative action" hire… I have a feeling that is never going to change, especially because Eli is just so mean.

I'm so excited for next year to actually write about a "real" sport. Yes, I guess track and swimming are real sports, but after writing track for over a year (thanks for that by the way) and then moving on to track in the water, AKA swimming, I was ready for an upgrade. That did come this spring with women's lacrosse and it was such an amazing experience, but after track who could complain?

Overall, it was a fun year and I learned a lot. I finally started caring about what I was writing about and tried a little harder, thank you women's lacrosse. Next year I'll be sure to come back with a thicker accent so I can make words like boat into seven syllables, you guys suck.

Jeremy and Connors - Congratulations on graduating and good luck with whatever you guys end up doing. Connors thanks for teaching me how horrible text wrap is and making me never want to have to figure it out on my own.

Meloni - Thanks for calling me dull. I'll really try and work on my dullness over the summer and hopefully I'll be able to bore you even more next year. Oh and you know that lacrosse picture I picked out was freaking amazing and being from Minnesota is cool, I don't care what you say.

Eli - I'm looking forward to being one of your assistants next year, but only if you aren't so mean. The Twins are so much better than the White Sox, just so you know.

Steve- Thanks for making me go down to the Collegian last year to get a beat, but I don't appreciate how you never went to any of the meetings, because I never got a ride home.

King - Bear Grylls is pretty sweet, but you know that if he was going to die he would be saved by his camera man. You've got to accept that.

To the rest of the sports staff- I had a lot of fun working with you guys the last year and a half and hopefully next year can be even better. And just so you all know, I don't care if you refer to the whole sports section as 'guys', it doesn't bother me.

ADRIANNE - How do you like your name in all caps in the newspaper? I bet you think it's pretty sweet. In fact, I hope you cut this out and hang it on your wall. You are such an amazing friend and life at UMass wouldn't have been the same without you these last three years, and senior year better be no different. Don't forget we still have to finish watching Alvin and the Chipmunks; hopefully it won't take so long to load. You better come to Minnesota this summer because the Turtinen family misses you like crazy.

Elise - Sorry I didn't do all caps like in Adrianne's, but she did request it first. I have two things to say, drunken leprechauns and friar tuck. I still owe you a drink, how about tonight? Maybe we can write some more musicals, we are so good at that. You and A better road trip to MN and come see me this summer; I can't handle three months without you guys. You are such a great friend, thanks for everything.

Obsession - I think that might say it all. I give you guys props for putting up with me all the time, and I mean all the time the steamrolling, crazy voices and everything else I do that has to be so obnoxious. I thank you for always being there for me, love you all so much.

Emily- You are so clueless, but I love it. I can't wait for next year when I can yell to you from my window. Love you and we're going on a DC date soon. I taught you well, Ly Lys forever.

The back hallway - Thanks for not killing me when I throw lacrosse balls at your door, try to lock you out of your rooms, bang on the walls to try to wake you up and just trying to annoy all of you because I'm bored. Hopefully next year I'll be able to piss you off just as much.

Seniors of Alpha Chi Omega- Congratulations! You girls have been such amazing friends and you will all go on to do amazing things. I can't imagine life at the house next year without all of you, good luck and congrats again.

Friends, have a great summer and I can't wait for next year, it's going to be a blast. Love you all.

Jeff Larnard
Crew

Carmelo Anthony Charge: Not knowing about rowing

I've only been here at the Collegian for a little more than a semester, but the little time has been great. I'm gonna keep it short and sweet to give space to the seniors since I'll have two more of these issues because of my sophomore status. Also, I only have an hour and a half to finish this before I have to send it in, because I just passed out for four hours when I wanted to start this. I guess that's due to the sleep deprivation I've had the past week due to all the training I've done. Better get use to it.

First I'd like to thank Meghan Murphy for bringing me down to the collegian and introducing me to the sports section last semester. At that time I had just been accepted to the Journalism major and had yet to even take a journalism class and really had no idea what I was doing.

I was given my first topic, Men's Top 25 Basketball, and when I wrote my first piece and went down to get it edited I wondered if they would want me back. Joe edited it and it was covered in red. One thing I remember Joe telling me was not to use clichés, which I clearly still have not learned since he still tells me it all the time. I think he just finds everything to be a cliché but oh well.

From writing that first notebook to covering crew, which I knew nothing about when I started, I feel I've come along way. Now being an assistant sports editor for next year, I feel the hard work and all the help from everyone else down in the sports section has really helped me earn that position.

Jeremy, thanks for giving me the opportunity last semester and teaching me a lot over the past few months. It's too bad you can't stick around for another year. Joe, I'm going to continue to be captain cliché just for you. But everything else you've taught me, which is a lot, I will remember. And I don't think I've been able to grace your "Most Ridiculous Person In The World List" so next year I plan to make that a personal goal.

Eli, I'm sure I'm gonna hear you tell me I'm fired and that you hate me plenty of times next year, but I promise I won't by as annoying as Joe. But with me as an assistant editor you'll have someone who appreciates all of you random statistics you know that no one else cares about. Connors, it's been fun this semester and these past few weeks training with you. Thanks for help preparing me for next year.

Ryan and Melissa, I'm looking forward to working with you next year and making Eli's life hell as editor. To the rest of the sports section, next year should be great and I'm really looking forward to it.

Mike Gillmeister
Cross Country Swimming & Diving, Women's Lacrosse

Daryl Strawberry Charge: Writing too many essays

After my first full year at the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, I can honestly say that nothing has impacted my life—short of my grandmother dying—than working for this newspaper.

I wasn't the most dedicated writer this year but I know that I've grown so much already. My writing is tighter, my use of AP style is better and I have a nose for what it takes to write for this section.

If I were to go out into the real world right now and look for a job, I would at least have a chance to succeed, given the experience that I've been blessed with while working with the fine people that I can call my fellow staff members.

Jeremy, I owe most of my growth to you. You've taught me the important of writing tight and adhering to AP style. From the short time that I knew you as an assistant sports editor, I knew that I could count on you for guidance. If anyone could tolerate my basket-case nature, it was you. Good luck in all of your future endeavors, my friend.

Mike Connors, I'll always be a better dresser than you, haha, just joking, no, dead serious. Regardless, you were always a dependable writer for the MDC and you will be sorely missed. I only hope that someday the Daily Gillmeister can rival the Daily Connors. Good luck, buddy.

Steve Games, absentee writer extraordinaire. Hey, I know, I didn't write in the newsroom much this year either but I still only saw you during meetings. Thank you for helping me during the women's basketball night, your advice led to my success. Good luck next year.

Melissa Turtinen, my perpetual beat partner, here's to a great year. I enjoyed reading your stories all year and your quiet intelligence that you brought to the section. Now, you'll get to flourish as an assistant editor I know that the section will be better for this very reason.

Joe Meloni, I owe my nose for a good story all to you. Your advice of telling people not just that a team won, but how they won, is the reason that I can write a halfway-decent wrap.

In your own way, you're one of the most influential writers that I've ever met. I can only imagine how dull my writing would still be without your help. I'm so grateful that you will be back next year as Managing Editor; I know that you will aid in bringing the paper back to prominence.

I can't thank you enough but since I'm on a word count, I guess that this will have to do.

Eli Rosenswaike, you've grown into a very capable leader for the section. Your writing has helped me learn what I need to do in order to thrive on bigger beats. I can't wait to learn from you next year, as you assume control of the section. I know that you'll do a fine job.

Adam Miller, calm the hell down and you'll be fine. You're a good writer and you'll only get better with time.

David Brinch, you bring swagger to the section and I like that. Your stories are always great to read and I look forward to hopefully working with you in the future.

Lamard, Fleming, I haven't gotten to know either of you very well, but next year should be interesting, as you'll both be my bosses. Only good things will happen with you two sharing the helm under Eli.

Michael King, you've always been more than willing to listen to any questions that I had. You made it easy for me to talk to someone at the Collegian. I'll be excited to work with you next year as you assume the role of Editor-In-Chief.

To anyone else that I forgot, I'm truly sorry and you mean just as much.

In closing, I would just like to say that the people at the Massachusetts Daily Collegian are some of the hardest working people on campus and it pains me to see people pick up the paper to merely do the puzzles and read the comics. There is so much more content that goes unnoticed and people should get the credit that they deserve.

Adam Miller
Tennis
Track and Field

The Big Show Charge: Underage Journalism

When I originally chose to go to UMass, I wasn't sure if I would continue writing sports, which occupied most of my life in high school. I pretty much decided that I would stick with the newspaper until it wasn't fun anymore, which ended up being a smart decision.

It was a very fun year with a staff full of great people and opportunities that I would never have my freshman year if I wrote at a Big 10 school (including a baseball game and the Atlantic 10 women's lacrosse semi-final game).

I remember hearing at the first sports meeting that there is a lot of turnover so if I stuck with the paper, I'd move up quickly. That was definitely the case this year. However, I have to thank a few people who gave me a positive experience at the Collegian this year and made me better as a writer.

Jeremy - At the beginning I was pretty overwhelmed at how much you edited my article and amazed at how well you knew AP style and could find so many different ways to say something.

I definitely feel like you really made my writing flow better, although I learned the most from you just by going to the meetings. You always mentioned what you didn't like in everyone's writing and what you said at those meetings stuck with me.

I couldn't explain how happy I was when you read my feature and moved your hand off the mouse, and it stayed off the entire second page.

Earlier this year, I said I wanted to have a correction-free article. That may not have happened, but I'm still happy with those 500 or so words in the track feature that went untouched. That feature gave me a lot of confidence in my writing.

Eli - You are the first and only person I know who was born outside the state of Illinois and is a White Sox fan. Even a south-snider would laugh that you support Chicago's second team but you're pretty cool anyway.

I hope you realize that once this year is over, you're not allowed to make fun of me and Brinch for being freshmen. You know more about sports stats than any other person I know, which definitely makes the podcasts pretty interesting even though you repeat everything you say in the news room.

Thanks for letting me cover baseball this week. I had a lot of fun covering the game even though Mike Stone gives the worst quotes ever. By the way, I still think Bryan Garret had two steals on that play.

It will be nice having you back another year as the Sports Editor so we can keep the quality the section we had this year.

Meloni - I can't think of a better person I'd want at the top of the paper than you considering the only reason why I was with the Collegian on day one was because you found the journalism face book group and said you wanted sports writers.

You even walked me to the first meeting since I had no idea where the Collegian was. You care so much about the paper and take a lot of pride in your work. I will never acquire your taste for hockey and cigarettes.

But anyway I enjoyed having you read my articles since you always explained what I was doing wrong and how I could change it. I've never had anyone thoroughly explain my own mistakes.

I'm glad you're coming back for another year. It will be great having two people who know sports in charge of the entire paper.

Connors - I didn't really get to know you that well until you took over the Assistant Sports Editor job, but you're great to work with. It was fun covering that baseball game with you and learning more about the Collegian. Good luck with whatever you end up doing next year.

King - It's nice to see you and Meloni will be representing the sports section as EIC and Managing Editor.

You had quite a handful this semester with the whole lacrosse scandal, Travis Ford, and training for next year. I hope you didn't have any friends on the lacrosse team, but you stayed calm with everything and did your job.

I hope I do at least half as good a job as you did with reporting the news-type sports stories if I get the opportunity.

Ryan, Melissa and Jeff - Congratulations on getting Assistant Sports Editors. I know you will do a great job because it's obvious you've worked hard since getting the job. It will be fun working with the three of you next year.

Brinch - It made things a lot easier to have another freshman on the staff. It's been fun hanging out with you and I'm sure it will be even better next year. I hope we finally get to be on a beat together. Hopefully there won't be any more conflicts of interests with you and women's teams. By the way, tell Crystal I say hi.

Gilly- It was nice getting to know you this year although contrary to what you think, I will be fine next year. I can't believe we're going to be in the same dorm next year. I guess time will tell if that's a good thing or bad thing but either way, you're a good writer. Our time is coming soon.

David Brinch
Skiing, Women's Lacrosse

Ray Lewis Charge: Fleeing the scene of Journalism

When I walked into the Collegian newsroom late last November, I must admit that I had no idea what I was getting myself into. But looking back on it now, it might have been one of the greatest decisions I have ever made. As a freshman and far away from home for pretty much the first time in my life, I found a sense of community and family immediately after working for the UMass collegiate newspaper. From advertising to graphics to sports to op/ed, everybody I have met and have gotten to know, thank you for taking me in, accepting me, and having faith in me. I have realized that being a sports editor for my high school newspaper and athlete that the sense of being part of a team is something I need in my life. It started out slow and boring, but once I got my first beat (women's lacrosse), I finally realized that this is what I want to do. I want to write. People say, I ask a lot of questions, and this is true. But, people are interesting, and I think it is necessary to get their stories out there. Thanks to Jeremy, Eli, Kingsy and Joe for giving me the opportunity to write for such a great paper. Thank you for also not giving me the assistant sports editor job next year, because you are right, I am not quite ready for the position and the time commitment that goes along with it. Jeremy, you and I are completely different people, but you are a great teacher, writer and editor. Some things you did annoyed me and pissed me off, but I feel that I learned a lot from you. I also realized, especially from reading your column today, that everyone has their own shit, and too cut people a break from time to time. I had no idea, and can look back and see that you being hard on me came not out of malice, but that you were going through a rough spot in your life. You have reached out to me and have taught me some valuable lessons to take with me for the rest of my life. Good luck with ESPN, they are lucky to have you, but don't forget to not take yourself so seriously. Now that you are graduating, maybe you can express your true love for UMass athletics. Eli, I have never met anybody who has loved so many random teams from so many random states as you, but I think this is a great quality that you exemplify. You are also a great teacher, but an even bigger nerd for knowing how many doubles Juan Uribe has hit during afternoon home games with runners in scoring position. I was with you when you broke the story about Coach Kellogg coming to UMass, and I can honestly say that you have a knack for getting the scoop. I look forward to working for you next year. Also, try growing your hair out longer than two weeks, and get rid of the K-Swiss's and double XL t-shirts. You weigh as much as a 5th grade girl, but you are a great kid with a great heart. Kingsy, my fellow Central buddy. Your input and charm are what's best about you, and I know you will make a great Editor in Chief next year. Your resemblance to J-Mac is uncanny, but I doubt that you could hit six three pointers in four minutes. Meloni, this summer, I want you to only drink two iced coffees a day, and to cut back to a pack a week. You might want to join some type of gym or athletic facility. You are a great writer and a good editor, and I am also looking forward to working with you next year. Like Jeramy, you pissed me off at times his year, but I know that this did not come from a bad place. You are just mad that I am now the best dressed writer in the section, and that athletes are more attracted to me than you. Connors, your satirical humor is what I love about you. I know that you will always say something hilarious, not even trying to be funny. You are always down for a good time, and have been really generous to me. I am going to miss you, especially you being 21. Now I will have to resort to Games, who will never pick up my phone calls. Good luck in whatever you do, because I know you will live it up and enjoy whatever it is Games, I have never met a cockier person with no reason to be, but I love you all the same. Next year, I will take over your title as the best athlete in the sports section. Good luck with covering women's sports for the rest of your life. I know how much you love writing about the Minutewomen. Sam, Jeff and Ryan, I look forward to getting to know you better and working with you next year. Gillmeister and Melissa, it's been real working with you on women's lacrosse, and I am looking forward to covering more sports with you. Miller, you are a great kid, and cannot wait to work with you for three more years. Before I forget, Adam Szigign, congratulations on graduating, you provided constant entertainment to me, as well as to the rest of the staff. I can't wait to see you on Comedy Central talking about how much Dane Cook sucks and how Carlos Mencia isn't really Mexican. I also want to thank my family and friends, Coach Alexis Venechanos and John Sinnett for being so accommodating. I want to also thank the athletes that I have talked to; you have been very nice to talk too. I want to thank you, the readers, because without you, this wouldn't be possible. Have a fun summer everybody, and I will see you next fall.

Scott Feldman
Field Hockey
Skiing
Tennis

Mike Tyson Charge: Grand Theft Pizza

Hey what's up all you loyal Collegian staff and readers, glad your actually tuning in to catch our last articles of the year. Now if my name is familiar to you, you either work for the collegian, have gotten drunk with me at some point, or are truly a die-hard Collegian reader.

Let me explain, I've have been on the staff for over a year now, and I've cut my teeth on the sports that, well, receive very little attention. I've covered Track, Field Hockey, Skiing and Tennis. Some of the sports were more fun to cover than others, but that's ok, I just loved being part of the paper.

After doing this for over a year and only now beginning to learn the finer arts of writing for a paper, I always get to have a good laugh when I see people walk in and wonder if they can start of covering football, or hockey, or basketball. If you're actually interested in writing, come down, but be ready to grind for awhile. (unless your Fleming that is)

Jeremy: you were the first person I ever talked to in the paper, you edited my stories since day one, and you've constantly kept pushing me to work on my A.P. Style. You can be hardass sometimes, but you have definitely made me a far better writer. My previews are much cleaner than ever, and I'm getting better at editorializing less and editing my work. I appreciate the hell out of the work you put in here. Oh and this article I decided to temporarily forget everything you taught me.

Eli congratulations on getting the sports editor position, the entire future of this section will depend on you and your ability to teach all of the new assistants their jobs. Luckily for us, I have no doubt in your ability to do a great job. You are willing to travel anywhere no matter your budget, you have some of the best writing in the entire paper, you already spend so much time in the newsroom you might as well bring a sleeping bag and a microwave and just move in, and your willing to do anything for this paper. Of course you're a huge slacker in school and you will have overcome your numerous personality defects (just kidding), but I have a ton of faith in you.

Meloni: to the new managing editor and they craziest Italian lush I have ever met, and the second real Bruins fan I have ever met. Be patient with all the new crew, but be ready to fight the new wave of convergence journalism. Don't sell out! Unless there is pay involved, then you should totally cash in. I'm sure I will be seeing you around a lot next year, and I'm sure you'll get to see me make a jerk out of myself within the week, so when I do be ready to call me on it and have some good times at my expense. I know I have had some at yours.

Connors: way to step up and take King's place on the fly, I remember that you were a great beat partner during the field hockey days, you always knew how to write a good story, and you were always the most easy-going editor. You might actually make it past 50 without having a stroke. It's been great working with you, I'm sure you'll have a great time in whatever you wind up doing after school.

Kingsies: what a ridiculous path you've been on. In the last year you've somehow managed to go from assistant sports editor, to Benedict Arnold assistant news editor, and suddenly you are the new EIC. And, you actually major in something that insures you won't have to live in a box for ten years like me. Ok, I can't print most of what I want to say, but you are one lucky bum. Good luck bringing this paper to new heights and beyond. Whatever you do, don't make fun of Wesley Snipes, don't allow anyone to challenge scholarships, and remember to always favor writers above all else, but most importantly, don't ever listen to a thing I say.

Fleming: to be honest, I'm not exactly sure why I'm bothering to put you in here. We've been friends since high school, we see other all the time already and we will see each other even more now that you are the assistant editor. Don't you dare forgot who brought you down to the office though, and I don't just mean for this semester. It's been awesome knowing you for so long, and I can't wait to beat you down in Madden 09. I sincerely hope the bruins become relevant one day, maybe then you and Joe will have someone else who gives a crap about hockey. Oh and don't disappear this summer, it's more fun when you act like your alive.

There are bunches of other people who have either helped me or been cool to me, but it's 3 in the morning and I've decided to blow off Latin homework for this already, so everyone else, Thanks for putting up with me, I'll see you all next year.

For anyone whose Misty–Eyed Memories did not get into the print edition of the paper, the rest of them are online at www.dailycollegian.com. Thank you all again for reading and thanks to our staffers for writing all year.

MISTY EYES from page 10

Ryan, good luck with graduation man, The Minute came out well and I know how hard you worked on it. About half as hard as I worked on The Score, but good job either way. Steph and Brian, be prepared to work your asses off next year, your grades will suffer and it will be entirely my fault.

S.Peazy – Sean Sullivan is the only college student I know who can pull off the sweatervest. He also loves musicians with deep voices and writers who write 300-page paragraphs. He's leaving us next year to hang out with Stan Moulton in NoHo, so he sucks for the time being.

Nick Belanger – Beers. Wednesday. Boom. Same for C-Mart and Hale.

HOEGAHHHDEN

Adam Szigign is a champion. Go see his stand-up in LA seven months from now.

And there it is, my farewell to the sports section. I know I swore, probably made some sexist comments and generally annoyed you all if you took the time to read this. I have a whole new job in a new department awaiting me next year, and I really don't know what to expect. But, as my boy Pacman would say, "I'll keep to myself, but I have some things in mind. I can't tell you, but it is going to very, very, very entertaining, I'll say that."

Mike Connors: Asst. Editor, Field Hockey, Women's Basketball, Baseball

Allen Iverson Charge: Impersonating a sports editor

So to begin, first and foremost – no I'm not going to thank God for allowing me to become assistant sports editor because that would just be simply clichéd and foolish.

However, I will bust out the second most popular cliché and thank my mother, so you're gonna have to deal with it. No, but seriously, I probably would've never found my way down to the Collegian if it wasn't for the constant pushing of both my parents. I enjoyed coasting through my first 2.5 years of college going to class and going out more often that I should have as well. I still indulge in the latter too much but feel that I've been able (deal with the "able" Meloni) to make my college experience more well-rounded. and I have to credit my parents for that.

After doing this for over a year and only now beginning to learn the finer arts of writing for a paper, I always get to have a good laugh when I see people walk in and wonder if they can start of covering football, or hockey, or basketball. If you're actually interested in writing, come down, but be ready to grind for awhile. (unless your Fleming that is)

When I first came down here, I was pretty awful – flat out. The fact that I didn't actually interview tennis coach Judy Dixon in person before the season ended – yea…as Charles Barkley would say, "That ain't any goooooddddd."

But after that I progressed. I improved my writing during field hockey, although I still believe the sport needs some rules changes. For example, why can't you use both sides of the stick? If that was possible Cher King might've been on a SportsCenter Top 10 by now. That's right Media Relations, start pushing for that rule change, making the Top 10 on SportsCenter would give you front page website material for at least six months.

Then it was on to women's basketball. Marnie Dacko, congratulations on being the first coach I interviewed that was taller than me. One thing I must say is that covering the team was my most enjoyable experience at the Collegian. I'm still up in the air if I was going to pursue journalism after college, but if I ever were to cover a sport, there's not a single doubt in my mind that I'd want it to be basketball.

Finally it was on to baseball. I came in under the impression that Mike Stone was the reincarnation of the Antichrist but I didn't end up having any problems.

Also, I've got to thank Dave Gunn for dealing with me for all three sports. I'm pretty sure I woke up one day to watch the Sox play at 5 a.m. in Japan and called Dave at about seven without thinking to inquire about practice times. Dave, I'll make sure I tell the next person who corresponds with the sport you're working not to do that.

Now it's on to these fellow clowns I work with.

Eli (don't feel proud and start puffing your chest out or anything, you're just the easiest to write stream of consciousness about and that's why you're first).

So remember in "8 Mile" when Eminem shows up in the championship round to see who's the biggest G in all of Detroit (screw the Pistons Eminem, you know where to find me...o yea, you suck too Kid Rock)? So then Eminem busts out the battle wrap basically saying everything the dude had planned to rap about him? Yea I'm doing the same thing to you. So Eli will write something to this extent: Different victory kiii

MISTY EYES from page 12

Eli Rosenwaike: Asst. Editor, Football, Men's Basketball, Baseball

Dennis Rodman Charge: Driving while ambiguous

The deadline for this story – which is supposed to encompass the entire year down here at the Collegian, which I spend nearly every second of my life at – was at 5 p.m. Naturally, I'm writing this sentence at 6:48 p.m. Yeah, I'm that guy.

It's no wonder why every professor I've had hates me so much…I'm never in class. Heck, I spent more time in New York covering the UMass basketball team's run in the NIT than I did in the classroom this semester. Sorry mom.

And because of all of the traveling (to Atlantic City and New York four times for basketball, to Virginia, Maine, Rhode Island and New York for Football) my bank account is as empty as Britney Spears' brain and I need as many years to graduate as Van Wilder did.

Because of all the all-nighters at the Collegian, the over 200 stories I wrote, the traveling, the interviews, the nights of work, the nights of just hanging out for no reason and the nights of arguing with everyone about why the Red Sox suck…I missed out on a real social life and pissed off my parents because graduating in four years became impossible.

So I'll be back next year as the new Sports Editor for the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, but only for the first semester because I should graduate after that. Maybe. Possibly. Oh, who cares?

I know it's cliché to say, but I literally spent just about every second of my life doing something Collegian-related. And almost every single time it consisted of me being made fun of by someone – or, more typically, by everyone.

But that's what makes this place so much fun. All my non-Collegian friends (and trust me, I don't have many) often ask me why I'm always down there, and it's hard to explain. Even if you take away the simple fact that I need the experience here to get a job upon graduation, being associated with the Collegian was the greatest decision I've ever made.

I've met so many incredible people down here; classmates that I will remain friends with for the rest of my life. And that's invaluable. And it's special.

Although I rarely ever think this way (selfishly, that is), I suppose the most important aspect of my time with the Collegian is how it's prepared me for my time after college. I've got to interview coaches like Jim Boeheim, Billy Donovan, Thad Matta and Jeff Jagodzinski; cover games at venues like the Carrier Dome (twice, and once for the Boston Herald), Madison Square Garden (twice), Fenway Park (twice), the Conte Forum, Alumni Stadium and Boardwalk Hall and write stories from a Beanpot Championship game, the NIT Championship game and the Atlantic 10 men's basketball tournament.

In just a short span, I got to cover two games at the Carrier Dome, two at MSG and one at Fenway. Not a bad little run.

And how could I forget the Travis Ford Saga? T-Fizzies, as we affectionately call him down here, made our lives a living hell for a good two-week span, when we had to write new stories every day about whether he was leaving or staying, and where he was going to if he did leave, and if he did leave, who would replace him and when.

There's a reason that I just wrote that in the most complicated and complex way I could think of – because that whole episode was so ridiculous and confused the hell out of us.

Alright, no more reflecting on what I've done, because nobody cares. It's now time to give thanks to the people who need it (nobody) and make fun of all those that deserve it (yeah, everybody but me for a change).

Firstly, I want to thank the now-officially-former-sports-editor Jeremy Rice for hiring me as an assistant over a year ago in the first place, and to assistant editors Joe Meloni, Michael King and Mike Connors for not only making this place as great and as fun as it is, but also for helping push me to get better and better every day. Although, just so you guys know officially, I have, and always will be better than all of you. Boom.

I want to thank the editors on desk, the copy editors (seriously, how can you beat a crew of Meghan Murphy, Greg McCarthy, Domenic Poli, Nichole Amaral, Amber Vaillancourt and Kirsten Swensen?) and night editors for their tireless efforts to make every story that much better and to the graphics staff (Chris Martin you are a BEAST and Mike Sarkes, you're not so bad yourself) for making the stories and the paper look more pretty.

I want to thank the coaches I've worked with over the years: Judy Dixon, Jim Rudy, Mamie Dacko, Mike Stone, Dan Brown and Travis Ford. I learned so much working with all of them and covering their teams, and any college sports writer would be a hard-pressed to cover a group of coaches that rival their kindness, intelligence, enthusiasm and success.

I want to thank every non-sports related person at the Collegian (the news editors, arts editors, ed/op editors, managing editor Katie Huston and editor-in-chief Nick Belanger) The paper – and not just the Sports Section, although it IS the best section – is incredible because of all of you. Just remember that no matter how many times the Harvard Crimson or Daily Orange runs their papers in color, the Daily Collegian still wipes the floor with them. And BC Heights, that paper isn't good, either.

I almost forgot the photographers, how did that happen? Because of course, you all now how much I respect you guys as "journalists." Seriously, I could probably take better photos with my cell phone camera. And that cost like $2,000 less than your beast-mode equipment. That crap is so high-tech that it takes like a million photos when you click just once, so you're bound to get a good picture every now and then.

Seriously though, thank you Brian Tedder and Michael Phillis (and to the others, like Amanda Lund, Jenna Oelschlegel and Caitlin Coughlan) for all the great shots you guys got this year and for all the driving you guys did to get those shots. It didn't go unappreciated, trust me.

Hey Tedder, remember the drive home from Mohegan Sun Arena? I still think you're wrong, the vans had NO idea.

Lastly, I want to thank my colleagues outside of the Collegian, guys like Matt Vautour, Marty Dobrow, Ron Chimelis, Howard Herman, Erik Gallant and George Miller. All six of you guys went completely out of your way to help me, and other Collegian reporters out whenever we needed it. I will forever be grateful. Thank you.

But seriously, Matt, I am still mad at you for telling me that I won the dollar pool (when I really didn't) after the Senior Night game against La Salle. I needed that money. With that money that I don't have because of your vicious lies, Kingsies and I still plan on taking you out to dinner sometime. You deserve it.

By now, Jeremy, if you're reading, you must be pretty proud of me. I'm being nice!

That ends now.

Go * yourselves, all of you.

Seriously, do it.

This is the part now where I make fun of everybody on the sports staff, i.e., the best part of writing the "Misty Eyes" every year. But since I'm lazy and I've already written over 1,200 words (Yes, I counted) there's only so much more I can take. But here goes…

Joe Meloni: I know you're going to spend about 1,000 words making fun of me in your Misty Eyes, rightfully so I guess. I could just use some of my space by making fun of myself and stealing some of your thunder, but I could go on forever and it would just be too depressing. Or, I could just retaliate and do the same, because, trust me, there's some serious junk I could say about you.

But screw it, I'm not going to. You have red hair. So you're life is shitty enough as it is – and always will be.

Michael King: Go marry Ahmad Nivins or Bryant Dunston already, seriously. Or stop farting on road trips. Or get a nose job…that schnoz is so big it could be classified as a deadly weapon.

For the record, I did some research: and I did, in fact, write the best 15 sidebars this year for men's basketball (that's how many I wrote). Oh, and the best Score feature. Chris Lowe would school Matt Pennie 1-on-1, but your article doesn't hold a floater in the lane to mine.

Why do you even work here? Go do my taxes.

Jeremy Rice: I remember when I first starting writing for the Collegian a few years ago, we never got along and always argued but everything and anything. Well, we kind of still do that now (Romo = good, Brady = not good…trust me) but I realize now that I was an idiot then.

Because you're the man.

I feel honored and privileged to follow in the footsteps of Rob Greenfield, Danny Picard, Jon Pelland, and you as the new Sports Editor of the Collegian. I learned a lot from you, have a ton of respect for you as a person and a leader of this paper, and know that if I display the same passion for this place next year as you did, the running success of this section will continue.

Seriously, good luck in wherever you end up once you graduate. You really don't need it, but to hell with it. I'm trying to be nice. Someone once taught me to do that from time to time.

Mike Connors: You know why we always make fun of you for "A Different Victory?" and for "have you ever even read a baseball story before?" It's because we got nothing else to make fun of you for. We got no material.

You're probably the most underrated person I've ever met. Other than Chris Paul. But he drops more dimes than you ever could.

Even though we never really actually covered any baseball games, you were my favorite beat partner of all-time. Man, that Beanpot game at Fenway Park was incredible. Seriously, nice lede you had on your sidebar though, definitely not beast like mine kiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiid.

Man, I wish Dicato got that no-no, it would have made our stories even better. How many people get to say they covered no-hitters at Fenway Park?

And how many of the people that have, can honestly say they've never even read a baseball story before?

That's something to be proud of.

I'm not sure what kind of job you will be going into now, whether it's journalism or not, but I'm sure it'll be something different…victory.

Steve Games: I'm going to call you at a random time in the next week and we're doing a podcast. Shut up and deal with it.

Good luck in law school. I'll also call you one day and you can be my lawyer when I'm arrested for driving while [half] black.

My minions next year: Yes, that's you Ryan Fleming, Melissa Turtinen and Jeff Lamard. I own you guys now.

I expect a feature from you guys two weeks into the summer, even though by then you won't know what beats you're covering next fall. No excuses, do it anyway. I sound like Joe now, yuck.

Ryan, don't screw up in the one semester you got left. You have to cover Football and live up to what Jeremy and I did with it this year. You're on your way to doing just that, but you gotta keep wanting to get better. Write during the summer. A lot.

Melissa and Jeff, If I actually graduate after the fall semester, you two will likely be battling it out to take over my position for the spring semester. That means a fight to the death during the first semester to prove your worth.

I could tell you that it will be whoever works hardest and writes better articles, but we all know that free guest swipes at the DC will be the key to getting the job. Right now Ryan has the lead, 3-0. You better hustle it up Melissa.

The rest of the bunch: David Brinch, Scott Feldman, Mike Gillmeister, Adam Miller, Sam Grossack and Nick O'Malley…I'm looking forward to working with all of you guys next year.

Crap, did I include Brinch in that? That was a typo. You're fired.

But now that you're not working for us anymore, you can write all the Ricky Harris features you want!

Seriously, your potential and ridiculousness are a big reason why I agreed to come back to be the sports editor next year. I promise you, if you show the desire to get better, work hard and act like you don't own the place anymore, you are going to have a special career at the Collegian. I hope to have a part in developing that.

Melissa and Jeff are going to duke it out for my job, but Dave you are going to have a fair crack at it. I promise. Unless I fire you first. That reminds me…David, you're fired.

And for the others; Feldman, Gilly, Miller, Grossack and O'Malley… stay sharp over summer. We need you guys more than ever next year to step it up. We're losing some special writers.

If I forgot anyone – clearly, I did – I apologize. This is just so impossible. I spent literally every day here all year long and how in the world do I encapsulate it all into one story (even though it is over 2,000 words long?)

Basically, I love this place. I love the people here. I love the experiences. I love the writing. I love the memories.

And you know what? I love getting made fun of by everybody down here. I can't wait to read everyone ripping on me when the paper comes out on Tuesday morning.

Because I can smile about it afterwards, knowing that I'm a better sports writer than all of you.

Especially Joe Meloni.

Joe Meloni: Asst. Editor, Men's Soccer, Hockey, Men's Lacrosse

Pacman Jones Charge: Indecent Exposure

Two years as sports writer at the Daily Collegian; one as an unpaid assistant editor – that really should have been enough. And it probably would have had I taken school as seriously as writing game stories and sidebars about the six sports I've covered in my time here. Since I didn't, however, I will return to the Collegian for my second senior year as its Managing Editor. I'm still not really sure what my job is, but I know I'll get paid for the first time, and the headaches of dealing with thin-skinned UMass athletes will be replaced with those from the equally-sensitive SGA and other groups of students at UMass. I can't wait, honestly. Writing for the Collegian has given me something to be proud of, a place on campus where I belong and a new group of people who will remain a part of who I am for the rest of my life.

Like I said, I've covered six sports in my two years as a beat writer – field hockey, swimming and diving and softball last year before men's soccer, ice hockey and men's lacrosse this year. I've covered one coach firing, three NCAA Tournaments, three Atlantic 10 Champions, a College Cup , a national player of the year and a big mess of a lacrosse season.

But there is more to journalism than what happens on a field, a rink or a court, and I can't wait to see exactly what it all looks like next year. My friends have questioned for two years now why I've dedicated my life to this newspaper, and I think they're finally starting to get it. Who I am now, and who I will be forever, was molded by what I learned here. There is no feeling in the world better than realizing what you're good at; I hope every freshman listening to their iPod in Psych 100 is as lucky as I was to find their calling no matter how long it takes.

There are a host of people that I never could have done that without. People who edited the drivel I turned in last year and others who dealt with my sleep-deprived self this year. People who carted my intoxicated and broke self around Amherst and others whose under-aged drinking habit I directly contributed to. There have been arguments, hugs, awkward moments, a painted a bridge and the occasional drunken jig with "Shipping Up to Boston" blaring in the background. And it's all documented in full on Facebook, the Daily Collegian Web site and the Amherst police log.

Most college students say everything I'm about to say on warm May nights at the Townhouses or in crowded apartments on North Pleasant Street. But we've spent all year informing you, and this is our one chance to kiss our own asses. This is my farewell to the sports section.

My grades and professors may disagree, but there are people outside of our dingy newsroom that matter in my life. Like I said in last year's edition, my father is directly responsible for funding all the trips I've taken to cover UMass in the last two years; Sam Koch cost my father nearly $1,000. As much as my decision to work here annoys him, he's been as supportive as I can imagine. He may not know it, but my love of newspapers began when he and I would pour through the Boston Herald sports section every Sunday morning. So, dad whether you like it or not, it's your fault I dropped out of the school of management and opted for journalism. I know I promised you a retirement house when I came to college, but the best I can do now is a few inches of space for in the paper. At the very least, a few thousand hung-over college students will know you're a great dad. I can finally answer "yes" when you ask if I'm getting paid. But that doesn't mean I won't be asking you for money every few weeks. Love you pop.

And then of course, there's my mom. It's the end of the semester, and I'm far more broke than normal, so I really couldn't do much in terms of a Mother's Day gift. I figured, though, that since you're the most overly-sentimental person I've met in my 22 short years on this planet that this would do. It's been said that "Behind every great man is a great woman." I feel, however, that the foundation of a truly great man is a great mother. Now I'm not quite a man just yet, but I'm getting there. And whenever I take another step toward manhood, I realize the importance of my mother in the process. For the most part, the things that make me appreciate everything she did weren't the big things. It wasn't about life-changing advice or some enormous bonding experience. It was about her throwing me batting practice before the school bus came every morning. Listening to the Temptations and Marvin Gaye – and Patsy Cline unfortunately – on the way to Nantasket Beach when I was a kid, and waiting up for her every night when she worked nights. As I've grown, the beach has been replaced by a bar and a bottle of cranberry juice replaced by beers, but it's all the same.

Mom, you are one of my best friends and I really cannot thank you enough for everything that you have given me. Aside from my own personal success, the biggest reason that I work as hard as I do down here is because I really just want to make you as proud as you've made me in the last few years.

You are my hero; Happy Mother's Day. I love you.

Jeremy – The prospect of sitting next to Dick Baker terrified me before the hockey season began. I now feel that you and Jon-Jon greatly exaggerated the overall ridiculousness of the Republican's finest; although his proposal of "Rice Patties" as a name for your weekly column lived up to my expectations if only for a moment. I read last year's Misty Eyes and I don't like that we stopped with our running count of Air Fives. We left off around 150 if I remember correctly, but it's probably too late to start counting again since you're graduating, douche.

I'd like to thank you as sarcastically as possible for leaving me as the only man remaining who can keep Eli in line. "Be nice" just doesn't sound as good coming for me since I'm an enormous prick. You were the staple of the section this year. While we went through all the different changes – tabloid, Web site, etc. – you constantly reminded me of everything we learned from Rob, Jon and Danny last year. Eli and I – not so much Kingsies – will keep all of that apart of what the Daily Collegian is all about, so don't you worry your little head.

Have fun covering your third NCAA Softball Tournament. I'm not sure how you put up with the world's most surly successful coach for as long as you did, but I guess you have more patience than I do. I still want to know who Jessica Serio's backup was last year.

Whenever you get depressed about unemployment this summer just listen to the advice of UMass coach Don Beuzies and keep up with the effort and energy. You may be whistled for pass interference penalties every five minutes, but it won't be your fault. You're just giving it your best. Much like Brett Watson who was, is and always will be the best player on the hockey team. Toot may love taking it to the net, but he also loves defense, more than clam chowder or Jack Parker.

Bee tee dubs, Kaytlin McCormick scored three in a loss. Don't let that faze you, though, win fit way nicer than loss did in that space anyway.

Good luck boss.

Air five – 15 ish, boom.

Eli – Be nice. The White Sox suck. The Hornets suck, and even though Tony Romo is seeing Jessica Simpson naked regularly, the Cowboys suck, too.

I forbid you from covering baseball at any point in time next season. Mike Stone isn't exactly Joe Torre, but I'm sick of hearing about him; even when he bunts with his cleanup hitter in the fourth inning with a one-run lead.

You can finally take some solace in not being the sport section's lone affirmative action hire. I doubted whether or not I could get you out of your room and away from Baseball Reference and into a bar before the year started. I seriously doubted my chances, but I'm glad to report that Eli is now an alcoholic. DRINKING! BEER! I can't wait to see "BLUNTS!" and "BITCHES!" in your away messages next year.

I don't think you understand exactly what you're in store for with me above you next year. Please rid your vocabulary of the words "only" and "just," I'm sick of editing them from your otherwise not terribly bad game stories.

You're no longer the lone affirmative action hire at the Collegian, so I'd like to officially retire the ambiguity joke. It's still funny, but it's only a matter of time before we get in trouble with someone who doesn't get it.

If at any point in time next year you plan on quitting, make sure to tell me; don't just leave a note, that doesn't always work. But hey, I guess it signified the end of a terrible cold streak, so a boom is certainly in order.

BOOM.

Kingses – Oh, I'm sorry. I thought the editor in chief should be someone capable of doing the job. Kidding, kind of, but seriously, fired. I demand an apology for being a miserable bastard while we were in North Carolina and not writing a single sidebar during the lacrosse season. Although you wrote a few pieces before the season started that probably could have been classified as such. Jim Connolly thanks you, bee tee dubs.

Our love affair with Sam Koch and Greg Cannella must now come to an end. There are probably 30-45 story topics we discussed and promised to write but never actually got around to doing so. Both teams have roughly 10 recruits that we neglected to report on. After your sellout the news section, it became all the more difficult. Although it provided Melissa and I endless entertainment while you trained your new assistants in the tone of elementary school math teacher. I'm sure they loved it though, my bad, my bad.

Tim Luce is way cooler than you are Security Guy. Despite the fact that his movements resemble both a squirrel and Michael Jackson's dance from Thriller.

Next year is going to be ridiculous. I mentioned last year that your little 3.945 GPA would not survive, and I was exactly right. I can't wait to see it plummet next year. The fact that you and I are now at the top of this place is ridiculous. From the first swim meet, when we were both hung over, to the last lacrosse game when our boy didn't make any room for us in the press box, we were obviously the best beat team in Collegian history. I mean, let's be honest, we would've beasted football way more than Jeremy and captain ambiguity.

We're inevitably going to butt heads once or twice this year. Unfortunately arguing about the crap we have to argue about next year is a little more consequential than arguing about whether or not to write attack of attackman. Speaking of which, UMass goal scored by No. 19 TIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIIM BALEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEESE. Assist by No. 30 Bobby Haaaa

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

TUESDAY, MAY 13, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Misty-Eyed Mugshots '07-'08

STAFF ILLUSTRATION/DESIGN BY MEG GARVIN

Collegian sports editors Mike Connors, Joe Meloni, Jeremy Rice and Eli Rosenwaike were arrested early Tuesday morning for kidnapping The Daily Collegian's sports section. After stashing it in a dumpster, Connors wrote the world's sappiest field hockey article, Meloni confessed his love for hockey coach Don Cahoon, Rice proposed to softball coach Elaine Sortino and Rosenwaike tried to apologize to baseball coach Mike Stone to no avail.

JEREMY RICE: SPORTS EDITOR, FOOTBALL, HOCKEY, SOFTBALL

RICKY WILLIAMS CHARGE: POSSESSION OF A SPORTS SECTION WITH INTENT TO DISTRIBUTE

So I guess this is it for me.

Three years of my life come and gone, and as trying as they were at times, they were also some of the best of my life. I discovered what I wanted to do with my life and I have the Massachusetts Daily Collegian and everyone who worked there alongside me to thank for it.

I've been thinking about this column for more than a year, and I honestly still don't know what I want to say. Simply, I will miss this place. I will miss the people who worked here and the moments of stress and happiness and utter hilarity that all happened somewhere between 5 p.m. and who the hell knows when, every night, Sunday-Thursday in the Campus Center basement.

My career began in Hamlin dorm in Northeast my freshman year. My original goal was to run right down to the Collegian and sign up as soon as I moved my stuff into my room. The following May, I met Eric Athas, who got me started at the paper. I ended up getting to cover field hockey right away, and I knew I was lucky to get a beat right off the bat (sports cliche No. 1).

From there, I moved on to skiing, where I got my first and only solo beat, and I really got my first big break. The coach got fired for some illegal stuff, and I got wind of it, and got a story in the paper before the University even announced - my first moment of feeling cool as a journalist (I later learned those come few and far between).

After skiing ended, I found myself covering arguably the most successful athletics program at UMass – softball. I liked it so much I've covered it every year I've been here. Coach Elaine Sortino taught me more about how to interview a coach that anyone ever has, just by her no-nonsense attitude and the way she can rip apart a B.S. question. Nobody does that better than Elaine.

The following year, I moved up a notch and covered men's soccer with Danny Picard, the same kid from Southie I covered field hockey with. One of the most interesting people I've ever met. Refuses to take crap from anyone, and God help you if you do cross him, he'll light you up in print better than anyone I know.

Little did I know at the time, but I was already being groomed as the next sports editor. I see that now, because I've done the same thing with six different people. After soccer, I covered hockey in the fall with Jon Pelland, who I got to know better than anyone else that year and still wish I had gotten to know better. He and Rob Greenfield, who was the sports editor that fall and moved on to managing editor in the spring, showed me what it meant to write about sports and take it seriously.

They hired me to replace Rob in the sports section that spring as Danny and Jon took over the role of sports editor together. Talk about a challenge. My girlfriend of four year was a thousand miles away, and I was taking on the most important position of my young career. And they were ruthless on me, night after night. And I'm glad for it. It's made me the writer and editor I am today. I covered softball again that spring with some kid named Joe Meloni and Domenic Poli. Two guys who have poured as much of themselves into this place as I have.

Joe was one of the first people I groomed myself, along with Danny and Jon, to become the next editor. Danny, Jon and Rob were leaving at the end of the year, and it was up to me to keep our No-Wire-Stories streak going. I hired Joe, Eli Rosenwaike and Michael King to be my assistants, and from there the most unbelievable, unpredictable, painful, joyful and memorable year of my entire life began.

The summer was not much of anything. I spent most of it locked up in a meat cooler at BJ's Wholesale club in Westboro, Mass., wondering how this was going to advance my career as a writer. The closer I got to late August, the more I thought about what was going to go into the famed Back to School issue: the first real challenge for any new editor. First paper of the semester and it's the biggest one.

Football season began, and I wish it had never stopped. The road trips, the home games, working alongside professional writers every week and of course, driving Eli "I don't have a license" Rosenwaike an approximate total of 3,000 miles across the northeastern part of the United States. Every minute of it I cherished. Both Eli and I thought on numerous occasions that what we were doing would end up being chronicled on these very pages.

We were right.

After the football team fizzled out in the playoffs, a couple rounds short of their title run from 2006, hockey season was in full swing again, and I was back working with Joe. The funniest kid anyone will ever meet. It's not even his jokes. You just find yourself laughing any time you're around him. And that's what I did.

The hockey team started better than it ever has, and crashed harder at the end than I had ever seen it. But it didn't matter. Our plans to go to Denver for the Frozen Four were put on ice (sports cliche No. 2), but the trips up to Durham, N.H., on consecutive nights to cover the first round of the Hockey East Tournament was were memorable enough. Equipped with one of the best photographers I've seen, we trudged up and down Interstate 95, in search of the right exit, and on the way back, any Taco Bell (strangely, a recurring theme).

Early-season softball action left no time for rest after hockey was done, and I got back to work convincing myself there's no reason to be intimidated by coach Sortino (I'm still not convinced). The Minutewomen are once again in the NCAA Tournament, and have a better short of making the College World Series this year than they have since I've been a student at UMass.

And that's where I find myself now. It's 11:24 p.m. on Monday night, one day of classes left as a student. I have to get up at 6 a.m. for my job with ESPN.com, the softball team is hosting again for the NCAA Regionals, and I'm rewriting this column after the first one got deleted (control + S anyone?).

As I look back at what is nearly completed, there's so much more I wish I could have done before my time at UMass ended. But the one thing I will never regret is taking the initiative to come down to the newsroom, and nervously find my way to the sports desk. All you can ever do in life is take what you have and move forward. College is over, and I've got a life to start. But before I do something crazy like that, I want to thank some people who I hope I am not saying goodbye to.

Eli – I'll start with you because you're the technically the senior assistant sports editor. Firstly, you have to be nice! You're gonna be the man next year, running the show on the south side of the newsroom; we can't have you telling new writers to kill themselves.

Seriously, though, you're gonna do great next year. I have no doubt about that. You've got plenty of experience covering the big teams (except baseball) and you'll teach the young guns to keep it going.

Really, though, the White Sox? The Hornets? I can almost understand the Cowboys. They were good once. But your reason for rooting for the White Sox is a player that's not even on that team anymore. You grew up in Marlboro, root for the Red Sox like everyone else or we will beat you with red socks (filled with bricks).

The road trips were ridiculous. The Taco Bell (told you there was a theme) in Maine, the Dunkin' Donuts in Virginia that didn't know how to be a good Dunkin' Donuts, the rib place down the street from it, the Wendy's on the way back from Rhode Island and the cop that pulled me over on the way to Colgate, it's all really made me think twice about ever getting fast food again (in the case of the cop, I just really don't want to drive in the state of New York anymore).

After all that driving, I've got to thinking … get your god damn license! No one will be there to drive you around next year, and my knee is still hurting after that 13 hour drive down to Virginia. For real, covering football was a blast and I'm glad we got at least one beat together. Good luck next year with the Collegian and the internship at the Gazette. Don't let Stan get the best of you.

Joe – You're ridiculous. That is all.

OK fine, there's more. You're Irish, not Italian. And not everything goes boom. Also, wash your hat. It's filthy. I mean, my hat is old and beat up too, but at least it's kinda clean, maybe. And you love Toot way too much. Objectivity my ass.

It's OK though, I love Toot too. He's the man. Too bad his team wasn't. Next time I cover a team that has a collapse like that I'm going to rip them to shreds. They're lucky their coach was so nice to me.

Denver didn't happen, and neither did the Garden, but Durham, N.H., did. And that's a happening place right? Well, it was while we were there, looking up the nearest Taco Bell locations (see? Theme). Your insatiable love of fast food rekindled my love for the basic chicken quesadilla in the weird half-paper half-plastic wrap thing. I never knew you could open the whole front like that. Would have made it a lot easier to eat those two on the way home from Maine.

Really though, thanks for being such a good guy all year. You balanced the place out when it needed it, and you were the guy that listened when I needed someone to. I'm real proud that you got the managing editor's position next year. You're more than qualified and you've got more passion for this place than anyone I've ever seen. Protect the newsroom from the business tyrant, I mean your wife, King.

You're the funniest kid I have ever met. I know I said that earlier, but it's true. Everything is funnier when you're around, which is why I'm so sad to be leaving finally. Keep in touch, man. We'll drink some real beer together and watch a Sox game.

Air Five. Boom.

Kingsies – You traitor. Ah what the hell, I forgive you for jumping ship to news. It clearly was the right move for you, look where you are now. I never got to cover a beat with you, but I would have loved it. You and Eli did a hell of a job with basketball, before the season, during and after.

You've come a long way from your foray into the UMass Hoops world to becoming Editor in Chief, and you deserve it. You've worked your butt off down there and it shows. You didn't even have a beat when you started in sports and were assistant editor of the section the next fall. It's going to be a long and challenging year for you, but I know you're up for it.

Connors – You started late dude, but you rose fast. You took over for King admirably this spring and handled it with ease. I wish we could have gotten you on some bigger beats before you were done, because I'm sure you would have loved to cover men's basketball, but you'll get your shot in the future, of that I'm sure.

Unlike everyone else, I can't really make fun of you for the "A Different Victory" story. As touching as it was, I wrote the headline, so it might as well be me right there with you. You're the only one graduating besides me, so good luck to both of us I guess.

Melissa, Jeff and Ryan – I'm proud of the way you guys stepped up this semester and showed us you were ready to move up and move forward. All three of you are ready for the challenge and I know you'll do a great job with him leading the way. Just make sure he's nice to you. And if he's not, don't hesitate to tell me and I'll yell at him for you.

Melissa, I know it's tough being the only woman in a male-dominated field (OK, I don't actually know that at all, I'm just assuming), but stick with it. You've learned a lot since you started and just training you these past few weeks I can see you're going to do great things next semester. And don't let anyone tell you that you can only cover women's sports. Unless you want to. I don't know how that Title IX crap works.

Ryan, one of the coolest moments I've had as an editor was when you called me after your first night covering the BU and UMass Lowell hockey games. All you told me was that you wanted to get better, so I told you, and you got better. That's the most rewarding things about being in a position like this is seeing the people you teach actually learn things from you and apply them. I hope you can do the same for some new kids next year.

Jeff, you did a lot with very little this year. You only got to cover crew, but you blew it up and did everything you could with it, and that's why you're an assistant editor now. And despite what anyone else wants to think, you do know what you're doing, so don't let a few pissed off athletes get the better of you. I promise that's going to happen again, if not to you, to someone else, and I'm glad that you'll know how to handle it now. All three of you will do great next year. I was honestly worried back in the fall about the turnover around here, but I'm not anymore. You guys have improved a lot and I look forward to seeing what you do with the section next fall.

Adam, Brinch, Gillmeister, Feldman, Sam, Nick – You guys have come a long way in your writing. You each have your own things you need to work on, but every time you write, it's better than the last time you wrote, and that's the best way to go about it. They say in sports to try to be 5-10% better every time you go out (another sports cliche. I forget how many now), but if you keep to that concept, you will all be editors yourselves before you're done here. You all have the potential; you just need a little more grooming before you're ready to take the next step.

Some of you are pretty new, but I promise you, if you keep at this, it will pay off. If there is any advice I can give you any of you before I go, perseverance pays off in this field. So don't give up, and don't get too discouraged. You'll get better and you'll get your shot.

Dom – We missed you this spring down in the newsroom, but it's good to hear you're coming back. You're a good writer, and we need as many of those as we can get. We started about the same time back in the fall of '05, and we're still chugging away. I'm sure you'll be glad to be back with us at the Collegian and done with the Gazette, so just keep doing what you love.

Nick – You had one really tough job, and the paper has looked great all year. You had a vision and you stuck to it and saw it through. Even if I didn't like the tabloid, we still had some pretty good Friday issues.

Chris – My lord and savior. I don't know how many times you bailed me out by putting together a graphic or a bracket or a fill or who knows what. We kept he No-AP streak alive as long as we could, and a lot of that was thanks to you.

Katie – I couldn't imagine trying to come back after a year away and pick up where you left off with one of the more demanding positions at the paper, and it was cool getting to know you while we weren't paying attention in astronomy class (when we actually went).

Meg – Just like Cheryl last year, thanks for putting up with me fighting for more pages all the time. I swear you must have had the toughest job in the place because you had to work with all three departments. I know I wouldn't want to try it, but you did a great job.

Derrick, Will, Kate, Holly – Go Team News! Yeah (failed slow clap). Well I tried. You guys were great to work with. I don't know how the rest of the newsroom puts up with sports, especially news. Well done though, and Kate, we'll always have Thursdays, right?

S.P. – SPZ, S.P.-easy, however you spell it. I thought you would have made a great editor in chief had you chosen to run, and you're probably the best writer down here, so I'm glad you're going back to writing instead of editing because you really have talent.

Ryan, Steph, Woody, Skye … and Tim – So you're the ones that work on the other end of the newsroom. Well, hey thanks for all those extra pages, we sure needed them. As with everyone else, I wish I had more to say but it's 1 a.m. and I'm getting yelled at to finish this thing. It was great working with all of you, and I mean that, as overstated as it may be.

Woody, I know I'm the only one that knows you as Woody, but I'm glad to see you're making your way down here. I've seen what you can do with graphics and you're a great writer. I'm sure I'll see you around the Blackstone Valley, but keep working hard at the Collegian. Like I said to the sports guys, it will pay off in the end.

Tedder – You rock, dude. That's all I can say. You got more sick shots and went to more games for sports you didn't have to. Honestly, the sports section would have been nothing without you. I'll meet you at Taco Bell any time for another quesadilla (that's like reference No. 6!).

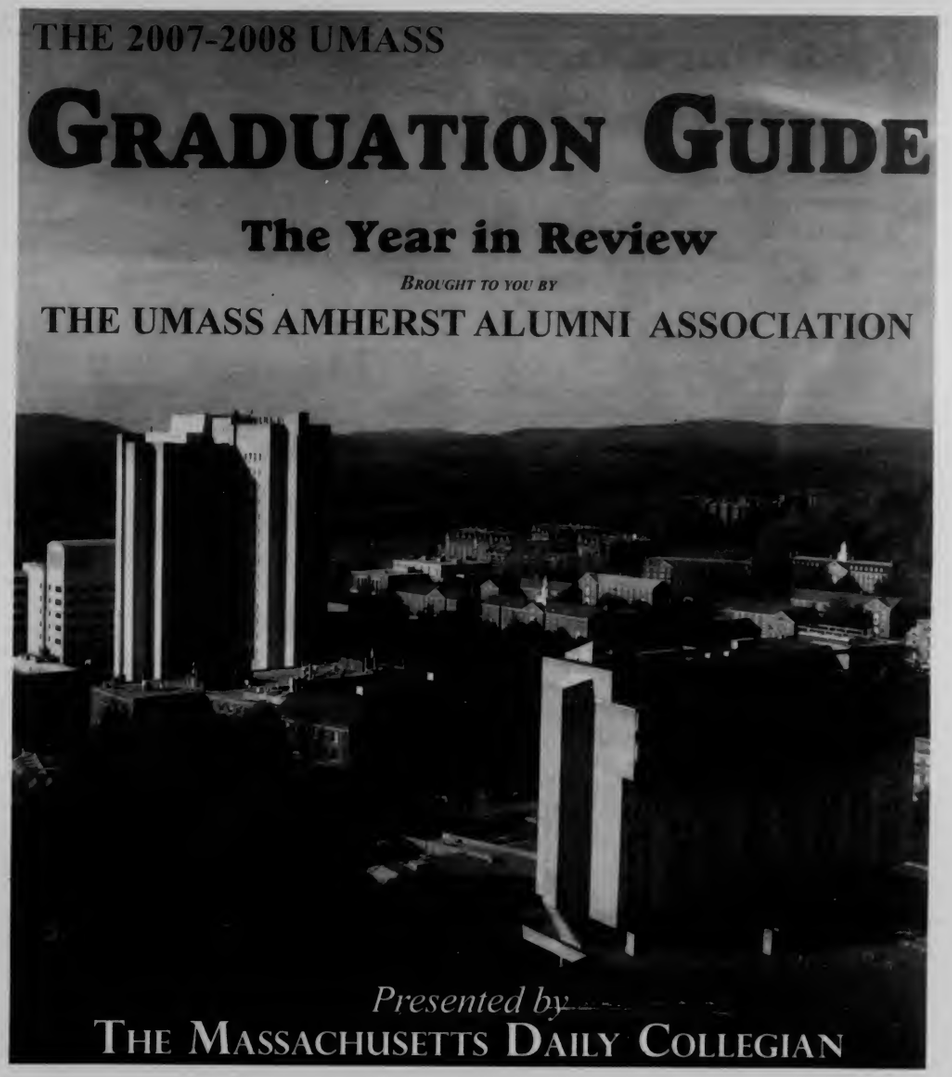
Phillis – I should have listened to you in upstate New York when you told me to get off the highway. Instead, that statie pulled a U-turn and I got a $200 speeding ticket. I'll remember for next time. Both you and Tedder are talented and capable, and I know you'll go far.

Eric Athas – I know you don't work for the Collegian any more, but since I thanked you in the last two Misty Eyes, I'm going to do it again. You're the reason any of this was possible because you're the one that got me down here. It was insignificant at the time, but like I said, you got me started, so thanks man.

To everyone I mentioned and anyone I didn't. I've said this countless times by now, but I will always cherish my time at the Collegian. This place is awesome and I'll always remember you guys. I went through some amazingly difficult times this past year, and in part because of all of you I was able to stick through it, knowing I had my work at the Collegian to focus on. I will miss all of you more than you'll know, so call me any time for a beer, but none of that Busch Light crap.

Lastly, I have to thank you, Mom. You knew I would be a sports writer when I was in third grade. I didn't even know it until I was ready to graduate from high school. You helped me get through so much and you encouraged me more than anyone that I could do it all and come out the other end alive. Well, here I am, and I have you to thank the most for it. This may very well be the last story of mine that you read in the Collegian's pages, and since you read more of my stories than anyone else, I am dedicating these last words to you. I love you.

See MISTY EYES on page 10



THE 2007-2008 UMASS

GRADUATION GUIDE

The Year in Review

BROUGHT TO YOU BY

THE UMASS AMHERST ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

Presented by

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

Your Alumni Association: Your New Best Friend

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

The Alumni Association offers you a first-year membership at half-price: just $20.

The Alumni Association is your avenue towards professional and social networking, career tools, valuable discounts and privileges, and a way to connect with friends and alumni. Check it out!

STUFF EVERYONE WANTS

- Free lifetime UMass Amherst Alumni email forwarding address
- Social and professional networking tools through the Alumni Online Community
- Career tools, such as resume review and mentoring opportunities
- Free profile, access and search capabilities in the online Alumni Directory

DISCOUNTS & BENEFITS

- Discounted auto, renters and home insurance through Liberty Mutual
- Discounted health insurance and one year free life insurance through Marsh Affinity Group
- Discounts on hotels, car rentals, Jos. A. Bank clothing, movie tickets, ski lift tickets, merchandise and more!
- American Airlines offers members up to 10% savings on airfare, and 5% on any land components, when booking vacation packages
- UStore discounts of 10% on clothing and gifts

THINGS TO DO

- Discounted admission to Alumni Career Services professional development & networking events
- Free membership in your local Alumni Club
- Volunteer opportunities

BRAIN FOOD

- $100 off KAPLAN Test Preparation classes
- Access to Alumni Career Services podcasts

Go to UMassAlumni.com for detailed information and to join now!
You were. You are. UMASS.

Welcome to the Daily Collegian's 2008 Graduation Guide. This issue marks the culmination of a year of hard work by the Daily Collegian and its entire staff. Inside this issue you will find a collection of columns written by senior Collegian staff. While at first glance the Graduation Guide may seem like a self-indulging tribute to the Collegian, it is in fact much more. Inside you will also find our year in review, a summary of life at UMass as seen by the Daily Collegian.

Since 1967, the Daily Collegian has been a staple on campus each and everyday, providing the campus community with content exclusive to the pages of this student paper. The Collegian has always prided itself on being the absolute best resource for UMass news and information. As the outgoing Editor-in-Chief, I'm proud to say that we have had a successful year in doing so.

The Graduation Guide acknowledges and rewards the individuals that have worked tirelessly all year to provide you, the reader, with a quality publication. In this issue we look back on the people that made it all possible, give ourselves a pat on the back and bid farewell to UMass.

I ask that you take time to read through the senior columns. The lessons and experiences shared by these individuals are the same for any senior who accomplished more than simply earning a degree while at this university. And believe me – whether you admit it or not – we have all accomplished much more in our time at UMass than you may think.

At the minimum, we have discovered ourselves. We have grown up together, and shared this incredible ride that is UMass together. And no matter how you may feel about your college experience, remember to always take pride in the fact that you came from University of Massachusetts. The Collegian is happy to have been there through it all.

-Nicholas Belanger, Editor in Chief.

Congratulations, graduates. On behalf of The Daily Collegian, good luck.

Left to right: Alex Bender, Christopher Martin, Katie Huston, Meghan Murphy, Nicholas Belanger, Dan Exter make up The Collegian's executive board.

Top 10 News Stories 2007-08

Student strike protests fees and other issues

1 Hundreds of students skipped class and protested fee increases and other issues on Nov. 15 and 16. The strike sparked a series of negotiations between student leaders and University officials that resulted in an increase in financial aid, a group to examine diversity issues on campus and another to oversee the UMass police department.

University names Holub as new chancellor

2 Former University of Massachusetts chancellor John Lombardi left for Louisiana State University over the summer in response to President Jack Wilson's plan to restructure the school's leadership. Thomas Cole was then named interim chancellor, and the University hired Robert Holub from the University of Tennessee in May after an exhaustive, nation-wide search.

Eight UMass lacrosse players involved in off-campus incident

3 Eight UMass lacrosse players were dismissed from the team due to a violation of team rules stemming from their role in an off-campus altercation that sent three people to the hospital. Amherst Police arrested three players, and criminal charges are still pending for those alleged to be involved.

Gargano leaves post for LSU

4 Following former chancellor Lombardi, Michael Gargano resigned his position as vice chancellor for student affairs and campus life in January to take a similar role at LSU. During his nearly five-year term, Gargano was a constant target of criticism for students complaining about campus life and University administrative decisions.

Vassell involved in racially-motivated confrontation

5 Former UMass student Jason Vassell was involved in an on-campus altercation in February. Though two individuals alleged forcibly entered Vassell's Southwest dormitory in attempt to commit a hate crime, Vassell was charged with intent to murder and assault. March brought students, faculty and members of the UMass community together to rally in support of Vassell at a public march and vigil.

Students choose not to riot after Red Sox, Patriot championship games

6 After riots in 2004 and 2006 badly damaged both University buildings and its reputation and resulted in dozens of expulsions, UMass students chose not to riot after the Red Sox won the World Series and the Patriots were defeated Super Bowl. While several postgame altercations did occur on campus, the isolated scuffles did not reach the proportions to which UMass has garnered national attention for in past years, making this otherwise "non-story" relevant.

'New Dirt' project remodels campus

7 The University's ongoing, comprehensive building project, known as "New Dirt," resulted in the renovation and construction of several important university facilities. Construction was completed for buildings such as the Studio Arts Building, while others like the Integrated Science Building and Central Heating Plant have yet to be completed.

Bomb scare, written threats startle campus

8 In October, a bomb scare temporarily closed campus after a suspicious object was found in a Herter Hall classroom. During the spring semester, a series of notes threatening violence were found in bathrooms across campus, though the threats never materialized. The incidents resulted in the creation of a university-wide text messaging system.

Student badly beaten in Sylvan assault

9 A UMass student was assaulted in McNamara Hall after a former student forcibly entered the victims dorm and allegedly struck the individual several times with an aluminum baseball bat. He allegedly then stabbed another former suitemate and fled the scene before being arrested.

Travis Ford bolts for Oklahoma State after postseason run

10 Days after taking the Minutemen to the finals of the National Invitation Tournament and agreeing in principal to a contract extension, UMass men's basketball coach Travis Ford resigned his position to take over the OSU job. Ford led the Maroon and White to a 25-14 in 2007-08 but managed no NCAA Tournament experiences in his three years at UMass.

DAILY COLLEGIAN
Photo of the Year

DERRICK PERKINS
News Editor

"I'VE ENJOYED EVERY SECOND OF IT, EVEN THOSE TIMES WHERE IT SEEMED LIKE EVERY STUDENT GROUP ON CAMPUS CAME DOWN TO TELL ME I WAS A BAD JOURNALIST FOR NOT SLANTING THE NEWS COVERAGE IN THEIR FAVOR."

You can't write a senior column without coming across like a big, walking, breathing, graduating cliché. It's impossible. Believe me. I've tried. I've stared at a blank computer screen for the past couple of hours and come to terms with that fact. It seems like a shame to me that the first and only time I'll be stepping out from behind the terse, analytical style of writing that a reporter clings to, after over two years of working for the Daily Collegian, it'll be to write a variation of the same column you read every time graduation rolls around.

Still, if I've learned anything from my college education it's how to regurgitate information in a way that doesn't come off like plagiarism. So, I guess my unofficial first shout out goes to every one hundred level history class I've ever taken.

Looking back on the past four years from where I am now, I never felt like a member of a community until I got involved with The Daily Collegian. Until the first time I walked into the newsroom a little over two years ago and asked the former news editor for a story to work on, I was like every other student you see walking across campus, sitting in class or waiting in line for mozzarella sticks at the dining commons. I had no special attachment to this campus other than being generally annoyed at the "New Dirt" construction that made my walk to class longer than the fifteen minutes and gave campus the all around aesthetic appeal of the Somme in 1916.

And let me just go on record as saying yes, that was an awful history joke and yes, I am a history major.

Still, for a while there, it looked like my fondest memories of UMass would turn out to be going to class most of the time in slowly crumbling lecture halls and living with an obnoxious roommate freshman year who liked to save his urine in empty soda bottles in his closet. With that, I made my decision a little past halfway through sophomore year to finally go down into the bowels of the Campus Center, past the Science Fiction Society office and the WMUA studio and into the front office of the Daily Collegian. It was one of the best choices I've ever made.

I still can't thank the news editor at that time, Matt Belliveau, enough for forcing me to take a story even after I had convinced myself that I just wanted to "check the place out" and "maybe just come back later or whatever."

Since that day, I've been given the opportunity to understand this university in a way that only a few other students experience before graduation. Sure, I've spent the large majority of my senior year working in a dank, windowless room buried at the very bottom of the Campus Center, but I've had a first-person view of the day to day drama of UMass. I've enjoyed every second of it, even those times where it seemed like every student group on campus came down to tell me I was a bad journalist for not slanting the news coverage in their favor.

Even so, I'll be walking away from UMass with a diploma in hand and the distinct sense that I was, at least for a small time, a member of this community. For all of the University's faults — the senseless bureaucracy, constant construction, internecine backdoor politics, and overly-priced food at the Blue Wall, I don't think I'll ever look back on the time I spent here with anything but fondness.

A big part of that fondness will be for the people I've worked with over the past year or so and those that have already faded off into the "real world" that lies somewhere beyond Amherst probably a couple exits down the Mass Pike, but are not yet forgotten. I could list them here, but then what would be the point? They know who they are and a brief shout-out in an end of the year column wouldn't come close to how much I've appreciated working alongside of them this past year. If I could pull it off without coming across as pretentious, I would quote Henry V right about here, but I can't, so I won't.

I suppose that it comes with any close-knit group of people. My experience at The Daily Collegian is easily shared by all of you moving on from an athletic team, fraternity or student organization on this campus. At a school like UMass, you really do end up getting what you put into your college experience. I'm just happy to report that I got more than I ever imagined standing in line for mozzarella sticks at the Franklin DC freshman year.

So that's the moral of my story, I suppose. What is my advice for underclassmen? Cut class once and a while, especially on the few nice, warm days of the year you'll get in Amherst. The best bathrooms are next to the Ucard office in the bottom of the Campus Center and cheap vodka is never worth the savings.

Oh, and a quick shout-out to the bartenders and the management of the Grad Lounge, strategically located directly above our offices, for always being there for us.

"Cliché city" my buddy Joe Meloni would say if he saw this, and he'd be right.

You stay classy, UMass.

Derrick Perkins was the Collegian News editor. He can be reached at dperkins@dailycollegian.com.

Holly Seabury
Assistant News Editor

"It boggles my mind that I'm graduating."

It happens with each new school year.

I vividly remember commenting to my classmates on the lack of handwriting skills the third graders had compared to my supreme knowledge of cursive as a fourth grader, rejoicing about my gigantic one inch height advantage over the new freshmen class when I was a sophomore in high school and of course, laughing from off-campus at Southwest residents who must suffer a year of dirty bathrooms and obnoxious shenanigans that happen outside their window.

But it takes me a while – perhaps too long – to remind myself that I am not so old and wise. There was, naturally, a time when I was a third grader getting S's (for Satisfactory, a "C" in my public elementary school) in handwriting. There was a time during early high school years that everyone decided to outgrow me, leaving me the shortest in the class.

And how could I forget that I was a Southwest girl for two fantastic years?

Just like every soon-to-be college graduate, I have developed. Criticizing those younger than me isn't insulting the not-yet-developed, and it's certainly not to make myself feel better. Instead, I'm remarking about my growth and my obvious immaturity about what's yet to come.

The summer that followed my first year at UMass began with a party including older friends. Because I only put away about four beers in a span of two hours, my name was replaced with "stupid freshman" for the rest of the evening. All throughout my remaining years at UMass, I did the same thing to all the newcomers I encountered on the weekend. It took me two years too long to learn that it's quite pathetic to judge someone's maturity by their drinking behavior.

And that made me wonder, what else have I learned while at UMass?

1. eBay, not textbook annex. PRS? Drop the class.

2. Course notebooks, that aren't filled yet, can and should be recycled. True story. I have not bought a new notebook since spring 2006.

3. I might be just a little bit biased, but The Daily Collegian is a great source of news (thanks to Derrick, Kate, King, Will and Katie: wonderful partners to work with), opinion columns (thanks to S.P., smart, witty and wise beyond your years, young man), great movie and concert reviews (thanks to the creative arts team), sports (okay, I don't read it everyday because I don't really understand everything, but you four are great writers and editors; Eli and Joe, thank you for making time at The Collegian entertaining) and Sudoku puzzles and crosswords that have helped me through a lot of tough times/science lectures (thank you, Adam… quite possibly the funniest person I have met at UMass).

4. Always keep your iPod headphones in your ears and appear to be shuffling for a great song when the kid you randomly hooked up with freshman year – and you're still friends with him on Facebook so you totally know each other's names – appears in that long hallway connecting the Campus Center to the Student Union that basically invites awkwardness.

5. Undercover police officers parked off-campus can and will arrest you, even if it's the first weekend back after winter break, and it's a blizzard outside, and you're in a cute skirt and you're polite…

6. OIT is super helpful, though expensive, but there is only so much they can do. Spill wine on your laptop keyboard once, they are saviors. Spill a Red Bull on it two years later, shame on you for not drinking wine. Thank you Nick and to those who pay for the printing and paper at The Collegian for allowing me to print off everything I need after the laptop massacre several months ago. I don't get paid, it's the least you can do.

I'm older, but hardly wiser. I still drink like a 16-year-old girl stealing her parents' bottle of Peppermint Schnapps and chasing it down with a glass of orange juice. Worse combination ever.

I've lived and learned, but I'm 21, not 78. I still have terrible handwriting and at five feet tall, don't see too many people I tower over anymore. I'll always remember sophomore year being the best, by far, even if it was on-campus. I feel dumb in upper-level courses and own UGG boots. Do I wear them over spandex, under a mini-skirt, in the heat of summer? Absolutely not.

It boggles my mind that I'm graduating. Still, I know that soon enough, I'll be commenting on those college kids… they don't even know what they're in for.

Holly Seabury was a Collegian assistant news editor. She can be reached at hseabury@student.umass.edu.

Meghan Murphy
Night and Copy Supervisor

"My UMass story is mine alone, and nobody else will have the exact same experience as I did."

My first weekend at college was spent somewhere out in the wilderness with bunch of complete strangers. We boarded the oldest school bus UMass could find, driven by a guy who probably had no idea how to operate the finicky stick shift, and waved goodbye to all the partiers who were ringing in the first weekend of their college careers. Instead of joining in the revelries, we headed off to the middle of nowhere on a retreat for the Commonwealth College living community we had joined.

Towards the end of a jerky, sickness-inducing ride, the bus stalled in the middle of a steep mountain road and started rolling backwards. One of the other girls – who was effectively still a stranger to everyone at this point – jumped up and yelled, "Get me off this bus," in a voice so panicked I thought she would rip the emergency exit right off its hinges.

We were all embarking on a new journey, and we had no idea where we would come out. It seemed impossible that four years would ever end. My college career stretched far past the horizon, so I was contented to think I had plenty of time.

Looking back on that first weekend, it seems impossible that I got to be where I am today. When we got on that faded yellow school bus, we were strangers, nervously anticipating our first classes and our first roommate disagreements. When we got off at our dorm after the trip, we had a shower-less weekend of sleeping in dusty cabins and playing cheesy get-to-know-you games to laugh about. It was a strange experience, but we went through it together.

And in the end, isn't that a lot like our time in college? We can complain about the way we're getting there – long Bursar's Office lines, subpar DC food, or buses that stall out in the middle of a mountain road – but we can't argue with where it's taking us.

Almost four years later, many of those same people – including the terrified girl on the bus – are my best friends, and we've survived all the boring intro classes and roommate battles.

And the amazing opportunities that college offers can really change you. It's hard to notice on a day-to-day basis, but it's really apparent after four years, when you tally up all the experiences you've had in college that have prepared you to move on. One of my friends spent a semester in Ghana, and another devoted hundreds of hours to lab research this year. Another worked as a nursing student in several hospitals, making a difference for so many families. Others spent countless hours volunteering for the Relay for Life to honor people who are battling cancer.

I have been lucky enough to work with some of the hardest-working people on campus at The Collegian. They put their hearts and souls into producing something that benefits the whole campus, and most do it for no pay and little thanks. Being a part of that spirit and dedication has been one of the most influential experiences I've had at UMass, and I never would have been able to predict that on my first weekend.

My UMass story is mine alone, and nobody else will ever have the exact same experience as I did. But all the students here will have their own stories by the time they graduate. It doesn't matter what it is, or if you have to take the difficult way to get there, but make your story your own. Those of us who are graduating will be ending this chapter, but everything we've done here has prepared us for what's coming up next.

Meghan Murphy was the Collegian Night & Copy supervisor. She can be reached at mmurphy@dailycollegian.com.

Skye McIntyre
Assistant Arts Editor

"I realize that if college can be summed up in one word, it is exploration."

Perhaps because writing is one of my passions, I rarely find myself at a loss for words. Just a week and a half away from the completion of my undergrad career (if my biology professor finds it in her heart to submit my grade as a "P" instead of an "F"), however, the right words just won't come. My final contribution to this paper may not be my best, but at least it will come from the heart.

Though it may be cliché, I'm incredibly thankful for the experiences I've had, the places I've been, and the eclectic group of people I've met along the way. It seems like yesterday that I sauntered across the stage in my high school's auditorium, shaking hands and exchanging hugs with faculty, simultaneously amazed at what I'd accomplished and wondering – with slight hesitation and a healthy dose of fear – what was to come. Fast forward four years – I realize that if college can be summed up in one word, it is exploration.

One has two choices when attending an institution such as UMass: stay in your safe zone, or color outside the lines. I'm glad I chose the latter.

I feel as if the last four years have caused me – forced me at times – out of my shell. Until a few months into my freshman year, I was notably shy – "Shy Skye" was a favored moniker my clever family concocted for me. I failed to branch outside the familiar in the beginning. I roomed with a best friend from home, logged many hours with my long-time boyfriend and viewed spending a weekend in my hometown as a welcome reprieve from co-ed craziness.

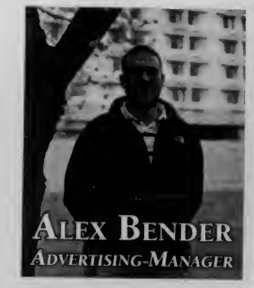
Sophomore year rolled around and taught me who my true friends were. It also taught me that I was stronger than I believed myself to be. I made some major life adjustments while setting my sights on the National Exchange Program and a semester is sunny, southern California.

My first semester of junior year is better off forgotten, but with below-zero temperatures and a fierce wind chill whipping against my face, I boarded a plane for Los Angeles in late January, feeling like the world was at my fingertips. The following four months were spent on the beach, alongside B-list celebrities in clubs you hear name-checked on "The Hills," and without any effort focused on academics.

Thankfully, my roommate was equally as West-Coast ignorant as I. On exchange from Iowa State University, she became one of my best friends, and my So-Cal partner in crime. Though leaving home and living away from creature comforts was completely uncharacteristic of me, my time spent away was critical. I learned more about myself then than I could have ever hoped.

Beginning last September, I began to form friendships with numerous peers I had previously overlooked. With a secure GPA, work and internship experience under my belt, I began to focus my energies on getting to know those around me, people who had been in my social circle for some time, but that for one reason or another, I had failed to develop a real connection with. Several house parties, walks home from the bars uptown, calls for shirt-off keg stands, days spent tailgating, adopting a puppy from a local shelter and consequently nearly being evicted, and a spring break trip to Las Vegas later, I look back on the past academic year with not a single regret. In fact, I'd do it all again in a heartbeat.

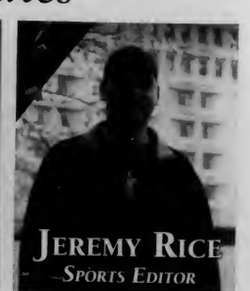
Unfortunately, I'm not Van Wilder, and I don't have a trust fund. I realize that it's time to move on (somewhat begrudgingly I must admit) to the next chapter in my life. Knowing that I made the most of my time spent at UMass, and that I've formed bonds I hope to carry throughout the rest of my life is what's most reassuring.



Though it took me three years to muster the nerve to finally stop in (thank you Meg Murphy!), I'm glad I found a place at The Daily Collegian. Working for this paper has improved my writing skills, built my portfolio, and first and foremost, allowed me to realize my 11-year goal: meeting Hanson. Though there were nights I would have rather suffered through a failed a root canal than deal with InDesign, the experience was ultimately rewarding thanks to the staff.

So to everyone: thank you for dealing with me when I couldn't get my layout to print for the umpteenth time and when I had a near mental breakdown at midnight on a Thursday because I forgot basic skills I should have mastered in training months prior. At least I wrote this piece on desk, on deadline. I guess I did accomplish something in the end.

Thank you to "The Family," I'll miss you all when we're no longer housed within a 5-mile radius. I could go on forever about each one of you, but my word count limit is looming. Erica, Kristen, Kelly, Amy, Kaitlin, Tommy, Curtis, Matt, Brooks, DJ, Sean, Bob and Greg – we'll always have Vegas. Thank you for being incredible people, I'll never forget what each one of you contributed to my college experience. Remember: this isn't goodbye, it's see you later.



Sky McIntyre was a Collegian assistant arts editor. She can be reached at smcintyr@student.umass.edu.

Other Collegian Graduates

Getting set for the big interview: tips from the pros

By Shelby Landeck
Collegian Staff

With graduation and summer coming up fast, it's time for students to be thinking about their futures. Writing resumes and attending interviews can be a daunting task, but with a few simple tips, you can land the job you've always wanted. The University of Massachusetts Career Services' book "A Guide to Career Services, University of Massachusetts Amherst" has tons of advice on what will help get you there.

One of the best ways to get your resume noticed is by tailoring it to fit a specific job. It should highlight your education, experience and qualifications. Generic resumes get far fewer callbacks. The employer wants to know that you are interested in the position and that you've done your homework, so highlight qualities that show you're the right candidate for that particular job.

The resume is a potential employer's first look at you, so you need to get right to the point before they decide to toss it aside. A mistake many first-time resume writers make is being too wordy. Complete sentences are unnecessary. Say as much as you can in as few words as possible, and begin statements with an action verb. "supervised staff of eight people," sounds and looks better then, "I was the supervisor of a small staff."

While being too verbose can pose a problem, not including enough information is just as bad. Don't be too modest; let the employer know exactly what skills, accomplishments and activities you have, without being misleading or arrogant.

Finally, though it may seem obvious, your resume needs to be clean, visually appealing and error-free. A few typos or misspellings can get your resume thrown into the trash. Use wide margins, and a common 12-point font, such as Arial or Times New Roman. Also, don't be afraid to format your resume using bold text and bullet points, but don't use fancy fonts or colored paper in an attempt to catch an employer's attention.

After completing an exciting, informative resume, you may receive a call from your potential employer asking you to come in for an interview. Interviews can be nerve-wracking, but going in prepared and confident will help you land the job.

Before the interview, think about your accomplishments and what makes you feel qualified. Talking about oneself can be hard for some people, so practice with a friend. Try not to memorize talking points, but instead work on being comfortable talking about why you're the right person for that position.

When answering an interviewer's questions, remember there is no single right answer. It is often more important how you answer a question than what you actually say. While responding to questions, stay focused and don't start to ramble and repeat yourself if you run out of things to say. Direct and succinct responses are much more effective.

Unfortunately, your skills and qualifications alone will not get you the job – you need to look the part. This means ditching those ripped khaki shorts and flip-flops for business attire. Go shopping, and consider your purchases an investment in your future.

For men, a two-piece suit in a color like navy blue or black works well. Ties should have simple patterns that are not too bold, dress shoes should be polished and hair should be trimmed and professional-looking.

For women, a knee-length skirt and tailored blouse is appropriate. As for make-up and accessories, keep it simple and professional. If you're not used to dressing up in this way, it is a good idea to practice wearing your new look before the interview to become more comfortable with it.

Most of all, have fun and be confident that your education and experience will shine though. If you're still unsure about either your resume or your interviewing skills, Career Services offers many resources to students. Meeting with a Career Counselor can give you a chance to discuss any worries you may have before the ever-dreaded job interview.

Shelby Landeck can be reached at slandeck@student.umass.edu.

Facebook at work: fact or fiction?

By David Humphreys
Collegian Staff

It is a well-known fact that Facebook.com is used as a reference for employers to evaluate potential job candidates. Whether it's an MSNBC investigation of a psychiatrist not getting hired due to topless photos or a CNEWS report on a number of firings due to employees' creating a group mocking their employer, Facebook often does not mix well with the workplace. But Serena Software disagrees.

The multinational developer based out of California uses the social networking site as the company's intranet, or internal network, to keep employees connected, sending company updates and information through the site.

Christina Johnson, a marketing coordinator at Serena and a 2005 college graduate of San Francisco State University, has worked in her current position for over two years and has seen the company adopt this new way of communication. Overall, she considers the experience a positive one, though she admits it has downsides.

"The hardest thing about getting your Facebook account work-ready is having to take off all of those pictures you enjoy most," she said. Johnson also warns students that prospective bosses may look at their Facebook pages to get more information about them.

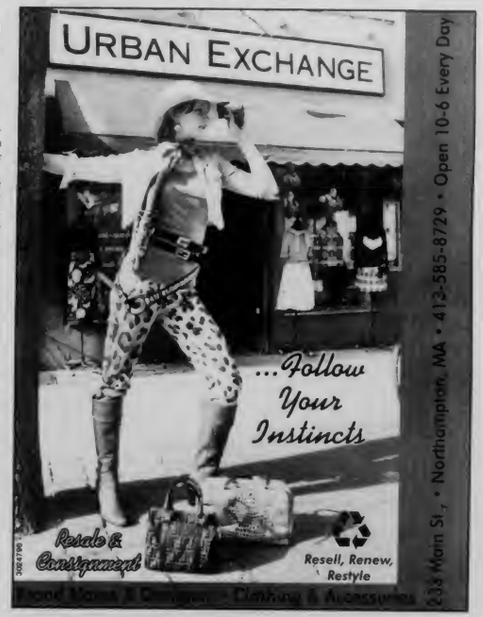
She encourages students to make their accounts work-friendly sooner rather than later.

"What many students don't realize is once you post a picture online, it's out there for the world," she said. "Someone may save pictures from your Facebook page during your freshman year. Then, they may re-surface when you're interviewing for jobs during your senior year. You should always be cautious."

But, according to Johnson, Facebook at the workplace isn't always something to worry about. She said it gave her a chance to get to know and connect with other employees whereas she might not have otherwise.

"It's so cool to work at a company where you are encouraged to use Facebook, and I can actually get to know the CEO," she said.

Because her Facebook friends have grown to include upper management and other employees, Johnson said it is sometimes hard to separate her personal and professional lives.



"There are messages and pictures from my friends that I keep private on my Facebook page so my work colleagues don't have access to them," she said. "I don't want my colleagues seeing pictures of my last trip to Vegas or what I did last Saturday night."

To help keep her personal life separate, Johnson said she often limits what other employees can see and screens friend requests before clicking "accept."

Johnson sees this Facebook trend continuing into the future.

"I believe more companies are embracing social networks because they see the value it can bring," she said. "Using Facebook, I have developed great friendships with the folks I work with around the globe."

David Humphreys can be reached at dhumphre@student.umass.edu.

Christopher Martin
Production Manager

"I can't shout out to this year's staff, there's too much to say and I couldn't put it on newsprint. Besides, I'd much rather meet up with you at the Grad Lounge for office hours."

I realize that no one's going to read this unless they work for The Collegian, know me personally, have no better way to procrastinate that 10-page paper, or they saw the name and thought this had something to do with Cold Play. Honestly, I wasn't going to write anything until my coworkers yelled at me until I felt obligated. Now there's the issue of what to write about...

I started working at The Collegian as a sophomore. My application process was a little different from most. I sat down at lunch with my roommate at the time, Nick Belanger ('09?). After downing our DC supply of wings and mozzarella sticks, Nick began to express his worries over hiring graphic staff now that he'd been appointed production manager. I told him I was good with computers and a quick learner, he told me to show up at 6 to fill out the work and tax forms. I had signed my next three years away over a wasteland of blue cheese and marinara sauce.

Throughout my career at The Daily Collegian, I've meet my share of great people. When I was just a night graphics staffer I designed Arts & Living covers and discussed the awesomeness of punk rock with Matt O'Rourke ('07), I gave my best impressions of Dan O'Brien ('06): "umm guys, do you like, do you think you, might, umm, have done something wrong here," walking a slightly over-inebriated Sheryl Wolnick ('07) home only stopping to pick her up and tell the police that everything was OK and joking about all else with Ginny Nielsen ('08).

The next year brought new people and a new position in day graphics. I was now designing advertisements by day from 10 to 2, with classes in between, then returning for nights to design page layouts from 6 to sometimes 3 a.m., and that's when I wasn't helping people out on last-minute projects or deciding I had nothing better to do then hang out down there with everyone else. It was Jaime Porter ('08), our advertising manager at the time, who gave me the best way to sum up The Collegian: "Do you get paid for everything you do down here? Of course not, you don't get close to what you should make. But, you've gained more experience from being down here than most of the kids on campus. It's all about experience." She was right, I don't get paid enough.

Getting paid really wasn't what it was about for me. Before I started at The Collegian I was an average electrical engineering student without a whole lot of friends on campus. After my first year of graphic design and the incredible support from my peers, and Nick especially, I left the mundane, suit and tie life of engineering and decided to set a career path for graphic design (with a twist of political science, thanks to Professor Machala at Amherst College). So junior year isn't the best time for changing my mind, but most of the seniors I know wish they could spend another year at UMass, and I will.

I'd like to take this time to apologize to my parents. Mom, Dad, I love you, thanks for all your hard work and overtime just to get your three kids what you never had, even if it takes us more than you wanted to pay for. I swear I'll make you proud eventually.

Junior year was entertaining. Most of my days were spent with the girls of graphics, Allie Marnone ('08), Courtney Reilly ('07), Jen Zolga ('07), Molly Eggleston ('07) and Elaine Barba ('08), the girls of advertising, Marsea Whooten ('08), Jameson Porter, and the girls of the newsroom, Anna Dollamitis ('07), Kristen LaCasse ('07), Nicole Boonjakuakul ('07) and Sydney Towne ('08). Many people think The Collegian is male-dominated, but I heard enough stories about boys, shopping and feminine hygiene to argue otherwise. I'm sure the guys like Matt Belliveau (?), Danny Picard ('07), Jon Pelland ('07) and Eric Athas got their shout-outs, which they all deserve. Again, Zolga and Molly, I owe much of my creativity and talent to them. And if I forgot anyone from junior year, it's because you never friended me on Facebook – what's the deal with that?

It was with great pleasure I took the position of production manager for my senior year. I had reached the executive status, with control over one-third of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, New England's largest college daily newspaper. OK, so that's not too exciting, but it means a lot to myself and anyone who's placed so much of their heart into The Collegian.

Just about every night we all sit around in our still-air, halogen cave at the bottom of 2 million pounds of cell phone-blocking concrete known as the UMass Campus Center, and discuss how we could be drinking and having fun like everyone on the outside. That's when we remember that while everyone else is procrastinating, we're putting together a source of news and history that thousands will turn to every day. It's a great feeling knowing that I have to search Facebook to find my high school classmates' success while they can find mine delivered to their dorm every day. I take pride in this.

I don't deserve but deeply appreciate the title of "graphics guru" that has been dubbed on me by this year's staff. For all of your respect I thank you a thousand times over. This year's staff has been amazing. Most of the newsroom was completely unpaid, the advertising reps trudged through the worst economy I've ever experienced, and my production staff blew away last year's staff and my expectations from beginning to end. I've never seen group of people come together so well against such odds.

On top of it, The Collegian was well in debt at the beginning of this year; and we somehow managed to raise a sinking ship. Congratulations to this year's executive board: Nick Belanger, Alex Bender ('09), Katie Huston ('08), Meg Murphy ('08), Dan Exter ('08) and the always-forgotten Kathy Shea ('10).

At times you'll hear people say they couldn't do it again if they tried – this is not one of those groups, we could do this a thousand times over and have just as much fun doing it, and the faculty and students of UMass would never have any idea of the appreciation we deserve.

Linda Wallack and Marty Pappas, the "mothers" of the Collegian: It was always good to see your smiling faces as I trudged into work on early mornings. Marty, I'm sure you'll get a copy of this even in Florida. I hope everything goes well with your daughter's business, and if not, The Collegian will pay to get you back here. Linda, you were always there to talk with when the stress got to me and to feed me oranges and cookies. Without you two, the trip would have been a lot lonelier.

I can't shout out to this year's staff, there's too much to say and I couldn't put it on newsprint. Besides, I'd much rather meet up with you at the Grad Lounge for "office hours."

Would I do it all again? Hell yes. Would my girlfriend Natasha kill me if I did? You bet.

I'd like to take this time to thank Natasha Farrington ('08). We've been in love for five years, a quarter of our lives, and I still regret not asking you out sooner. For all you put up with, and it's a lot, I appreciate everything you've done for me. I love you and I'll see you when I come home tonight.

Most of all, I'd like to thank Nick Belanger, one of two best friends I've ever had. You mentored me, you sang and danced with me, you painted the Amherst College bridge maroon and white with me, and you got arrested for painting the Amherst College bridge with me. You are my brother and I will never forget any of this because we'll still be laughing about it 30 years from now.

Again, I thank everyone from The Daily Collegian this year and every year. You've all made this big man cry for pride, joy and the sadness that it's all over...

Chris Martin was the greatest production manager the Daily Collegian has ever seen. EVER! Carwarts@studentnewsdaily.com send love

Arts & Living Top 10 of the year

By Ryan McAskill

The University of Massachusetts and surrounding area is a hub for arts and living in the Pioneer Valley, and this year was no different. Everything from Gym Class Heroes to Lewis Black, Wrestling to Quidditch was at our fingertips and in our ears. With that said, The Daily Collegian presents the top 10 arts and living stories of the last year.

10. Gym Class Heroes

The first major concert of the 2007-08 year – Gym Class Heroes, Tyga, The Pack and DJ Abilities – back in mid-September was a strong kick-off to the academic year. Gym Class Heroes lived up to their high standards of outstanding, energetic live performances full of sexual innuendo and unexpected surprises.

9. 4/20 on the Hill/Extravaganja

The 4/20 weekend holds a special significance for the college-aged crowd. This year was no different as the UMass Cannabis Reform Coalition hosted Extravaganja on the Amherst Common. A day filled with music and merchandise was only topped by the colorful array of characters who turned out. Extravaganja was followed the next day by the 4/20 concert on Orchard Hill.

8. Wrestling Show

Wrestling fans were brought back to the heyday of sports entertainment as "Full Throttle Energy Drink Presents Pro Wrestling Live" was featured at the Mullins Center in October. UMass students Brian Wittenstein and Sean Blum were responsible for the event that featured an Amherst Street Fight between Justin Credible and Brother Runt and appearances by Dimond Dallas Page, Scott "Too Hot" Taylor, The New Age Outlaws and Eric Bischoff. A handful of the wrestlers even spent a few hours at Rafters the night before hanging out with fans.

7. Lewis Black

While it may seem like a long time ago, Lewis Black was the headlining act for the First Week festivities in September. In a sweltering Curry Hicks Cage, Black took on all comers including religion, politics and sex. He was even able to get an uneasy response following a punchline, then added, "I have the ability to shock college students... I feel f great tonight."

6. Tokyo Police Club

The Canadian quartet known as Tokyo Police Club was one of the Northampton-based Iron Horse Entertainment Group's highlights of the year. The group played the Pearl Street Night Club in April and translated their frenzied material seamlessly in the live setting that was complete with an elaborate light show.

5. Quidditch

On a cold and snowy morning on the Amherst College quad in April, Middlebury College and Amherst College met in an epic Quidditch match. The "muggle" version of the mix between rugby and soccer from the "Harry Potter" book series has been popping up on college campuses around the country. It garnered such attention that the national CBS Morning Show sent meteorologist David Price to cover the competition.

4. WMUA Spring Concert Kick-Off

The Student Union Ballroom hosted the first-annual WMUA Spring Concert Kick-Off in May. The free concert brought in acts like Hadoken, Mussels, Baker, Deer Tick and These United States. Deer Tick was the runaway favorite of the concert as lead singer John McCauley's bluesy, finger-picked ballads were only outdone by his banter and rants between songs.

3. Jim Breuer

Jim Breuer kicked-off the Spring Semester with a sold-out February show at the Mullins Center. Part of his "BreUniversity" tour, Breuer educated the crowd on things that they would not be learning in the classroom. While he did break out some of his classic bits, like hand gestures and "party in the stomach," a majority of the routine was focused on his roles as a father, son and a husband. As part of the tour, the show was recorded, and bootleg copies are available.

2. Grateful Dead Symposium

"Unbroken Chain: The Grateful Dead in Music, Culture and Memory" public symposium was a weekend dedicated to the community and culture of the Grateful Dead and was held in November. With lectures, documentaries, live performances, art work and forums, every aspect of Dead life was touched upon. The highlight of the conference was a panel consisting of Jerry Garcia's first wife, Carolyn Adams Garcia (Mountain Girl), Dan Healy, the band's tech specialist, and former NBA great and notable Deadhead Bill Walton, who spoke about their time with the band.

1. Humans vs. Zombies

The struggle for survival took on a new and more drastic meaning in November when the campus-wide Humans vs. Zombies game started. With nerf bullets and marshmallows galore, over 600 UMass students took part in the event that garnered press and opinion from all angles. Whether you wanted to fight the zombie horde yourself or considered the whole thing a nuisance, it is impossible to deny that it united the UMass community like nothing else. They even reached out to the community with a food drive that collected over 1,000 pounds of food for the Food Bank of Western Massachusetts.

Ryan McAskill
Arts Editor

"My time at UMass as a whole has been almost nothing but fond memories and fuzzy moments."

I never actually thought I would make it to this point. Mere weeks from graduation and that step into the big, bad real world looming…and I'm terrified. Now the realm of unemployment and no health insurance awaits.

As always when closing a chapter in life, it becomes time to reminisce, whether you want to or not. It becomes impossible to not think about those wonderful college experiences, like getting dropped off from a party to your dorm at 4 a.m. only to have the fire alarm in your building get pulled just as you get to the door, and you're too drunk to fully comprehend exactly what is going on, so you lay on the ground and wait to either pass out or get let back in while all your RA friends look on.

We all have memories like that and will be leaving behind different things that hold certain significance.

My time at UMass as a whole has been almost nothing but fond memories and fuzzy moments. Never again will I be able to set my alarm for 7:30 a.m. in order to get up for something I have to go to (an 8 a.m. lecture) only to hit the snooze button for three hours…and have no repercussions or guilty feelings.

We all know the things we take away from our college experience are far more then just a degree. We have learned numerous things about life and about ourselves…as well as professional form and etiquette while on the beirut table and how to properly throw a fancy Christmas party in a cramped dorm room complete with a real tree.

I can already feel the tears starting to build as my mind races from memory to memory, party to bar.

One thing I will miss most about my time at UMass is being a part of the often dysfunctional family that is The Daily Collegian.

My time at The Collegian may be shorter than a majority of the other departing members, but it was no less meaningful.

Only two years ago I transferred to the University of Massachusetts from Northern Essex Community College as a journalism major and had no idea what I was doing, aside from knowing I wanted to write.

My first experience with The Collegian was an open staff meeting where Rob Greenfield, the former sports editor, told me there was no chance of working for that department. Lucky for me, my friend and fellow NECC transfer Tim McCall was the assistant arts editor and quickly recruited me for the arts and living section.

Despite being somewhat reluctant, I agreed to lend my skills to arts and was given the opportunity to interview Dave Attell.

From there I have covered everything from "Walking with Dinosaurs" and Quidditch at Amherst College at 7 a.m. in a sleet storm to hanging out with Jim Breuer and having Dave Attell buy me a shot of Jameson Whiskey in his dressing room following his set, despite my pleas not to as I was driving…But honestly, how to you tell a famous comedian like Dave Attell "thanks for the shot but I can't," after already passing on a shot of Jager no less then 30 seconds before?

I have been able to do things that before coming to UMass I would never even imagine were possible – like being the editor of the wonderful new arts and living spring special issue, The Minute. I always knew I could do great things with very little sleep and a slight hangover, but now I have an actually finished product to prove it.

Now, everything surrounding The Collegian has not been a positive experience, as my GPA and Joe Meloni's translucent white skin will attest to. We were denied access to this year's spring concert because someone working (and I'm still not sure who) screwed up and didn't get the band management to sign off.

I have also had George Carlin, Danny Glover, Jimmy Eat World, Paramore, Fat Joe, Lewis Black, Stephen Lynch and Carrie Underwood turn me down for interviews for whatever reason. I even had to sign photographer Brian Tedder's life away so we could take pictures of Ms. Underwood.

Regardless of the ups and downs of The Collegian, I would not replace it with anything.

I'm sure your looking for some epic closing here: words that will be echoed for generations to come. Unfortunately, I don't think I can handle that, and if you have actually made it though to this part of my rant, I commend you. Instead I'm going to join my fellow Collegian editors, James "Hale Storm" Hale, Derrick Perkins, Joe Meloni, Meg Murphy, Chris Martin, Steph McPherson, Kate Olesin, Will McGuinness, Eli Rosenswaike, Brian Wood, S.P. Sullivan, Adam Szajgin, Michael King, Nick Belanger and Katie Huston, Collegian caterer Natasha Farrington, UMass concessions god Keith Toffling and the long-lost Tim McCall, and head to the Grad Lounge for office hours.

Cheers.

Ryan McAskill was the arts & living editor. He can be reached at rmcaskil@student.umass.edu.

Amber Vaillancourt
Copy Editor

"Rugby has shaped a large part of who I am today. I would be lying if I said it didn't."

At the end of my sophomore year, I'm pretty sure my friends didn't get it. "I can't go out, I have a rugby game," I would say every Friday night to quell their pleading questions as to why I wasn't out, dressed and ready to party.

I said this just about every Friday night for the next two and a half years, through groans and moans, "I can't go out, I have a rugby game." Sure it was tough watching the mobs of stumbling co-eds hike to their next party or bar, but Saturday was not that far away.

Being on the rugby team here has taught me a great many things, positive body image and self-confidence, how to ruck, scrum and maul, team and leadership skills, as well as how to drink from a dirty boot. I'm not the only one who has learned. I have had the pleasure of watching my rookie class learn the same lessons as I did, and together we watched rookies after us learn the same things. Through the good, the bad and the ugly, we have survived everything imaginable and we survived it all together.

Rugby didn't make up my entire college career. I am a Southwest-South girl at heart and my friends from Poli-Sci TAP and Sweet 16 third floor of John Adams Tower deserve a hearty shout-out. But in the end, there are just some things that only my rugby girls can understand.

Together, we invaded Cocoa Beach with our bikinis, board shorts and sports bras pretending to cover our massive black-and-blues. Where ever we went, it looked either like the battered women's shelter or a female detention center on a field trip because between the bruises and our rough-housing, it was often hard to tell.

We learned how to win and lose together. I never in my life thought that I would spend more time crying about a lost game or a missed try instead of a torn ACL - but I did. We were all like that and still enjoy the same "rugger" mentality. I have seen people play with broken bones just because our coach, Frank, asked them for a second half. Most of the time, Frank wouldn't even need to ask because we wanted to play.

We grew as a family on and off the field, becoming more like sisters than friends or just teammates. I trusted the girls of the rugby team with my proudest moments and also my most shameful. We shared hilarious stories of weekends long forgotten and reminded each other of one's that we wouldn't let ourselves live down.

Rugby has shaped a large part of who I am today. I would be lying if I said it didn't. I have met some of the best friends a girl could have – the toughest trash-talkers this side of Springfield and girls brave enough that they would try anything at least once.

I would like to say that I will never forget the times that we have shared; on our pitch, at Frank's or at socials, formals and in the football stadium bathroom dripping wet after a game. Thank you for making me Slam and never stop being creepy and weird, and don't forget that Saturday is a rugby day.

Amber "Slam" Vaillancourt was a copy editor and part of the news staff at The Daily Collegian.

James Hale
Web Editor

"I feel that leaving The Collegian and having a lot of my friends move to bigger and better things is the closing of a chapter in my life that I've enjoyed immensely and wish would never end."

When I transferred to UMass in the fall of 2006, I figured that all I would be doing was maintaining the delicate balance between keeping my GPA respectable (failed) and being well on my way to drinking myself to cirrhosis of the liver (succeeded). When I was approached, two years ago, by Nick Belanger about being the web editor for the UMass community newspaper, I said to myself "What the hell? Why not? Wait, what's a newspaper and why do they have a Web site?"

I walked into the newsroom of The Daily Collegian being the new kid on campus and knowing a solid half dozen people here on campus (including the two roomies that I'd graduated high school with). I was lost, overwhelmed and wondering why someone would be interested in anything that I had to say.

Moreover, I was totally out of my element. I was a computer science major in a sea of journalists. What the hell was I doing there? I figured that sooner or later, they would discover that I was not one of their kin and tear me apart like a pool of vicious piranhas. Needless to say, that didn't happen and I was soon accepted into the pack.

Two years have since passed and with two complete Web site rebuilds and having experienced a couple of regime, ahem, "administrative changes," our online readership is the highest that it's ever been.

The Daily Collegian has taken those first crucial steps into convergence journalism, and I have a group of friends that I wouldn't trade for all of the tea in China (that's a lie…I really love tea). All in all, my experiences over the past two years have been nothing short of spectacular, and I've come out the other side a much better person.

So, what happens now? Well, it's time for the old guard to step aside and let the young bloods take the reins and steer this paper to its rightful place as one of the top college newspapers in the country. (That's right, guys, I hyped you up and now you have to deliver.)

Our Web site and online presence still has so much potential that has yet to be tapped. I regret that I wasn't able to dedicate as much time as I would've liked to this little endeavor, but I feel that I've successfully been able to lay the foundation for the next generation to make our Web site something great.

But of course, I need to recognize some people that have made my life brighter as a result of working with them at The Collegian. Nick, Derrick, Chris and Meg: You guys are the wicked friggin' awesome. I couldn't ask for a better, more dependable and more substance-abusing group of friends than you. King, Joe, Kate, Steph and Will: There isn't a shred of doubt in my mind that you will do great things during your tenure here and beyond. Do work, son. I would also like to thank Mike Anmuth and the rest of the guys over at OIT LAN Support for putting up with my constant badgering and other degrees of nonsense over the past two years.

Although I still have a little time here at UMass, I feel that leaving The Collegian and having a lot of my friends move on to bigger and better things is the closing of a chapter in my life that I've enjoyed immensely and wish would never end. Thank you all for everything that you've done for me and I am honored to have known all of you.

So I suppose that I need to close this with something profound? Hmm, let's see…nope, you're talking to the wrong guy about that. However, I will leave you with this: get out. No, I'm not talking about escaping from UMass, but rather get out and do something.

Be a part of something, make some noise, rattle some cages, go nuts, because now's the time to do it. We only have these precious few years here and life's too damn short to keep your head down all the time. To quote the great Ferris Bueller (and his illustrious day off), "Life moves pretty fast. If you don't stop and look around once in a while, you could miss it."

Truer words were never spoken.

Remember – until you graduate, it's not considered alcoholism. I guess I still have some time to go look for meetings.

James Hale was The Collegian's Web editor. He can be reached at jhale@dailycollegian.com.

Adam Szajgin
The Comics Guy

"I'm like a 14 year old with his first girlfriend: I know the direction I want to go in but I'm not quite sure what I'm supposed to do when I get there."

A few days ago I went to the Textbook Annex to pick up a cap and gown for my rapidly approaching graduation from college. After filling out a brief survey in which I summed up my entire college career by filling in the "somewhat satisfied" bubble, I was handed my senior "gift." At first I was not exactly sure what the gift was, so I did what any inquisitive and respectful gift recipient would do: I said, "What the hell is this?" The guy behind the counter then explained to me it was a sticky pad that I can put on the dashboard of my car so my cell phone doesn't slide around.

Oh joy, oh rapture! No longer would I be plagued by the sliding cell phone of sorrow and shame. After four years as a member of the University of Massachusetts community, I was now holding in my hand a $60,000 mildly adhesive rectangle of goo. It was then that I began to think of one of the 2,000 horoscopes I had written during my tenure as comics editor at The Collegian.

The wise words read: "The world is your oyster, now get out there and shuck it."

As I prepare to depart from this concrete sprawl known as UMass Amherst, those words have more meaning than ever. The only things that UMass will outright give you are a few free T-shirts and a sticky pad if you are lucky, but if you are willing to do just a little bit of work, you can suck every last drop of goodness from the somewhat unwilling teat of this university.

Each building at this campus, each department and each administrative office has a pearl to offer you as a student. There are events, scholarships, activities and organizations all over this flagship of the UMass system, but you have to strip down to your skivvies and dive for them. If you want to be happy at UMass, you must approach your life here with vigor, throw it on the bed or floor or library elevator and shuck it until you are satisfied.

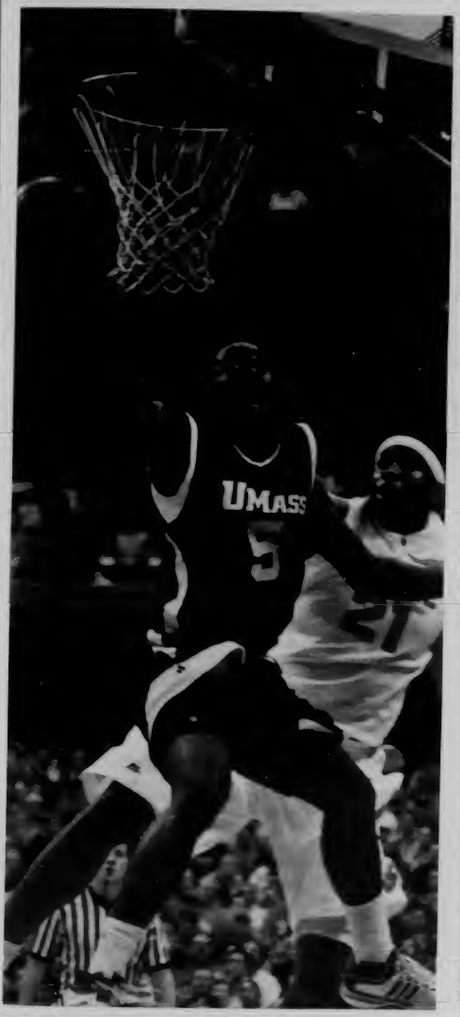
To give you a more tactile example of this principle, let us discuss the fact that I never post the crossword solutions online. This makes many people grumpier than a truck driver with hemorrhoids. This anger is further compounded by the fact that every single day, next to the crossword puzzle clues, it says, "Find all of today's solutions online," and right near that box, I offer the Daily Collegian Web site address.

Many people think that this means you can find the solutions online at our Web site, but that's not what it means at all. Sure, that would be easier, and yes, technically it is part of my job to do that, but I don't, so deal with it. Instead, I issue a daily challenge to go online and find the solutions yourself. That's what I mean when I say "Find all of today's solutions online."

That's the way UMass – and I am guessing life – works. The solutions, the answers, success and happiness are all out there somewhere, but you're never going to find them if you waste your whole day checking Facebook repeatedly and rearranging your Uggs. It's going to take work, lots of hard work. Sure, someone might hand you a gift once in awhile. Maybe they'll get you a job or hook you up with one of their single friends with a nice rack, but from there you are on your own, Muffin.

Even as a confident and outgoing freshman, this concept was difficult and frustrating to understand, but with time I began to realize what I needed to do if I was going to get more out of college than a gooey dashboard rectangle.

The truth is I am fairly uncertain about my future. I'm like a 14 year old with his first girlfriend: I know the direction I want to go in but I'm not quite sure what I'm supposed to do when I get there.



Still, I am not worried. I know there are good things out there and after four years in the red tape capital of the world, I am actually excited about working hard and getting them. God, that almost sounds lamer than vegetarianism.

As for college, sure I have a few regrets – a few things I never got around to doing – but in general I made the most of it. Working at The Collegian has been one of the best things I've ever done with my life. Getting involved in something makes you a part of this campus. The people at The Collegian and my friends across campus are like a family to me and we've made some phenomenal memories.

Additionally, I would be remiss if I did not pay special consideration to my hetero-roommate-lifemate Matt Janko. Even though he spits stinky sunflower seed shells everywhere, pees sitting down and actively pursues some of the most preposterous ideas on the face of the earth, he is and always will be the lamb to my tuna fish.

Look, if a dream is a wish your heart makes, then a wet dream is a wish your loins make. That being said, college has been a dream "cum" true for me. Straight up, in the past four years, I have grabbed the oyster of UMass, I have shucked it to climax and I recommend you do the same.

Adam Szajgin was the Collegian comics editor. His name is very hard to spell and he probably slept with your roommate.

Just photos...

KATIE HUSTON
Managing Editor

"I FELT INVIGORATED AND ALIVE AND PROUD. PROUD THAT, WELL, WE PUT OUT DAILY."

I wasn't going to come back.

When I went abroad for a year, I knew I was giving up my place in line at the Collegian. I left with more than a tinge of regret; the paper, after all, was what made me realize I loved UMass.

As a freshman, my second article was on the Free Higher Ed movement's inaugural meeting and a lesson in journalistic objectivity. "This is brilliant," I thought, and I wrote it full of revolutionary zeal: "If people know about it, maybe it'll catch on!"

A few days later, an assistant news editor called – inconveniently, but memorably, while I was snogging a boy from across the hall: "Katie, we, uh, have some real concerns about your article … I don't know if we can print it. You didn't interview anyone with an opposing point of view," he said.

I was mortified; I thought they wouldn't want me to write again. Thankfully, I was wrong.

Some of my sharpest memories of my sophomore year are of borrowing a friend's car to write about the "HoJos," the 59 kids who spent a semester at the Howard Johnson because the dorms were full; of skipping class and dashing around campus for the first article I wrote on a same-day deadline; of white balloons rising into the air at a "Free Jill" rally for captured journalist Jill Carroll; and the rush of covering the national story on the day she was freed.

I'd hated my first semester, but through the paper, I discovered the pulse of campus, the niches and subcultures, the layers and personalities and stories that made UMass worth my while. Through the paper, I met people I wouldn't have known, people who taught me AP style and objectivity, Moose and Beirut, and suggested I go to South Africa.

I knew I would miss those nights when I walked home from the newsroom at 3:20 a.m. while birds sang like it was already morning, when I felt invigorated and alive and proud. Proud that, well, we put out daily.

But in Cape Town, the early mornings of "Not so Cool-idge" and poring over printouts, the weekly exclamations over Ben Duffy's columns, the agony of finding out-of-place commas and misspelled headlines the morning after – it seemed so far away, like the life of another girl. Long-haired Katie, who, despite the best efforts of Nick Belanger and Dan O'Brien, still hadn't learned to like beer.

Coming back for the job of managing editor was the best decision I made this year. And as I race through these final days, I find myself wondering, what if? What if I had resisted the pull of the windowless newsroom – messy desks, long hours, constantly being on call?

If I hadn't come back, I wouldn't have celebrated my 21st birthday in a debate hall in New Hampshire with three men who later taught me – a moment too late – that a Dixie cup of scotch shouldn't be downed as a shot.

I wouldn't know there's such a thing as "surplus mustaches," understand the true meaning of the word "transparency," or have learned that smoking, according to Joe Meloni, is actually good for you.

I would have gone back to sleep when the "bro-bomber" left a 30-rack in Herter, and watched the final World Series game from the comfort of my living room. I would've paid a lot less attention to the Republican Club, and I would not be able to proudly say I put penises on parade.

I still don't know as much as I should about sports (sorry, "sports guys"), but if I hadn't come back, I wouldn't know that "unnecessary roughness" is a lacrosse penalty.

I wouldn't look forward to office hours. I probably would've consumed a lot less beer.

I wouldn't have been amazed every single day I came to work. Few people understand what goes on in our dungeon of a newsroom, where already overcommitted students put in hours every week, some without pay.

What I will remember most about the paper, more than any story I wrote or party we had (those are a bit fuzzy), is a dedication and passion that may live only in the boundless idealism of youth – people who put the paper first, sacrificing classes, friends, relationships and sleep because they believe in what we are doing.

We believe The Collegian matters. It matters so much that people sleep on couches, under desks, don't sleep at all in order to put out our special issues. It matters so much that some of us travel dozens of hours in a week to cover sports events. It matters so much that we find ourselves part of the all-night library culture, scrambling to catch up because the paper comes first.

And my chest tightens now, when I think of saying goodbye. To the staff of The Daily Collegian this year: Thank you. You made coming back from what I thought was an unbeatable year abroad more than worth my while.

You are talented, driven, irreverent and brilliant – and you know how to unwind at the end of the day in style.

What if I hadn't come back?

I don't even want to think about it.

Katie Huston was the Collegian managing editor. She can be reached at khuston@student.umass.edu.

THE YEAR IN SPORTS

Male athlete of the year – Zack Simmons

After beginning his career with the UMass club soccer team, Simmons led the Minutemen to the semifinals of the 2007 Men's College Cup in Cary, N.C. Although UMass lost to Ohio State, he made six saves in the match and kept the Minutemen alive against the strong Buckeyes team. His season earned him the 2007 UMBRO Soccer News Net Player of the Year award.

Female athlete of the year – Brandice Balschmiter

Balschmiter had a pretty good season last year as the ace of the softball team with 29 wins, a 1.39 ERA and 269 strikeouts in 262.1 innings pitched. But that was just a precursor to what she would accomplish in 2008, four no-hitters, two perfect games and a 24-6 record to go along with a national-best 0.54 ERA all before the postseason began.

Team of the year – Men's soccer

Women's rookie – Lindsay Maroney

Maroney ranked second on the softball team with a .364 batting average in her first season with the Minutewomen. Her .580 slugging percentage and .412 on-base percentage also ranked second.

Men's coach – Sam Koch

In his first 16 seasons at UMass, Koch led the Minutemen to sparing success. But in 2007, the Concord native led the Minutemen to the second NCAA Tournament during in program's history. UMass defeated top-seeded Boston College, 2-1, on Nov. 28 and then beat both Central Connecticut State and Illinois-Chicago at home before losing to Ohio State in the national semifinal.

Women's breakout – Jessica Serio

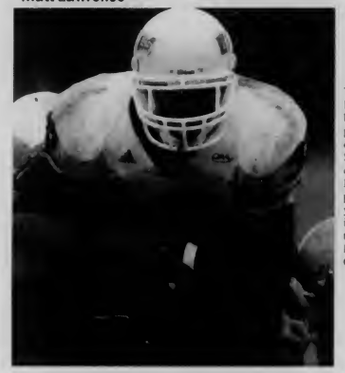
Serio struggled to replace the injured Emily Wehr last season at catcher, hitting .221 with just five RBIs in 40 games. But this season as the full-time starter she has been one of the best hitters on the team, leading the Minutewomen with a .388 average, a .471 on-base percentage and 15 doubles.

Men's rookie – James Marcou

Don't let the 5-foot-7, 150-pound frame fool you. Marcou played big on the ice at forward, leading the Minutemen with 24 assists and 32 points. The majority of his play-making came setting other teammates up, but he displayed his goal-scoring abilities with a hat trick against Vermont on Jan. 25 in a 5-4 loss.

Women's coach – Justine Sowry

UMass field hockey was among the best programs in the nation in the 1980s and 90s. But after falling from the spotlight in recent years, Sowry took over and led UMass to the Atlantic 10 Championship in 2007. The Minutewomen defeated Princeton in the NCAA Tournament before losing to No. 4 Connecticut, 4-1.



Men's breakout – Ricky Harris

Harris increased his scoring output from 4.5 points to 18.2 this season, earning him the Atlantic 10 Most Improved Player of the Year award. Harris was a big threat from 3-point range, hitting a team-high 104 shots from the perimeter. His five 3-pointers and 23 points against Syracuse in the NIT was instrumental in the 22-point comeback victory.

Comeback players of the year

Matt Lawrence

The first few years of Lawrence's college football career did not go his planned. But after the departure of all-American Steve Baylark, UMass coach Don Brown gave Lawrence the starting position. He ran 1,585 yards and 16 touchdowns in lead UMass to the quarterfinals of the NCAA Football Championships Quarterfinals.

Kaytlin McCormick

McCormick missed the entire 2007 with a knee injury but returned this season to lead the Minutewomen with 35 goals and 45 points. She complemented the speed of fellow attack Kathleen Typadis in leading the Minutewomen to the semifinals of the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

Noteable senior athletes

BASEBALL
Bryan Garrity
Ryan Franczek
Aaron Smith

MEN'S LAX
Sean Krygier
Brian Danvers
David Von Voigt
Paul Manesis

WOMEN'S LAX
Kathleeen Typadis
Melynda Zwick
Julie Papaleo
Jeannette Villipiano

SOFTBALL
Stacy Cullington
Lauren Proctor

FOOTBALL
Jason Hatchell
Brad Listorti
Matt Austin
Chris Koepplin
David Burris
J.J. Moore
Charles Walker

MEN'S BASKETBALL
Gary Forbes
Dante Milligan
Etienne Brower

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL
Kate Mills
Pam Rosanio
Alisha Tatham

WOMEN'S SOCCER
Britt Canfield
Kristin Walker
Jenny Roehrig

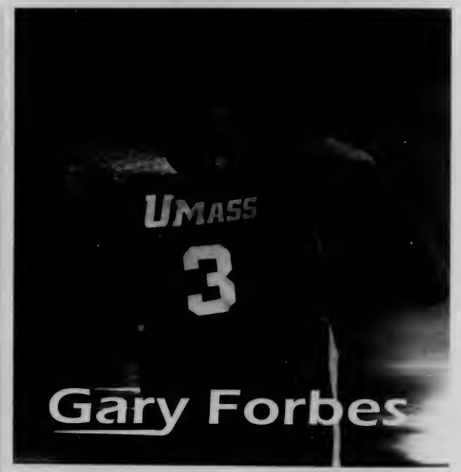
MEN'S SOCCER
Kenny Cook
Chris Brown
Doug Rappaport

HOCKEY
Mike Kostka
David Leaderer

MEN'S SKIING
Jason Small

WOMEN'S SKIING
Eliza Hawkins

MEN'S TRACK & FIELD
Ryan Durkin
Nathan Barksdale



MEN'S SWIMMING & DIVING
R.J. Rappe
A.J. Vozella

WOMEN'S TRACK & FIELD
Christina DeRosa

TENNIS
Masha Pozar

CREW
Sarah Marsan

FIELD HOCKEY
Becky Letourneau
Erin O'Brien

Stories that made the year

The Travis Ford saga

He's going. No, he's staying. Wait, he's now in Stillwater, Ok. UMass basketball coach Travis Ford said he wasn't interested in the job opening at Louisiana State. He then turned down a job offer at Providence and athletic director John McCutcheon said Ford would be here "for many years to come." That turned out to be days as Ford left for the job at Oklahoma State.

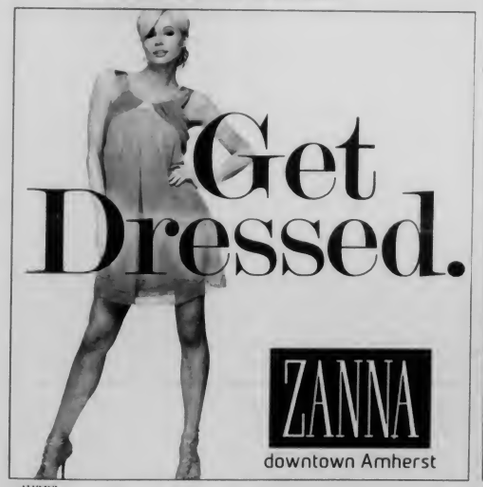
UMass comes back down 22 against Syracuse

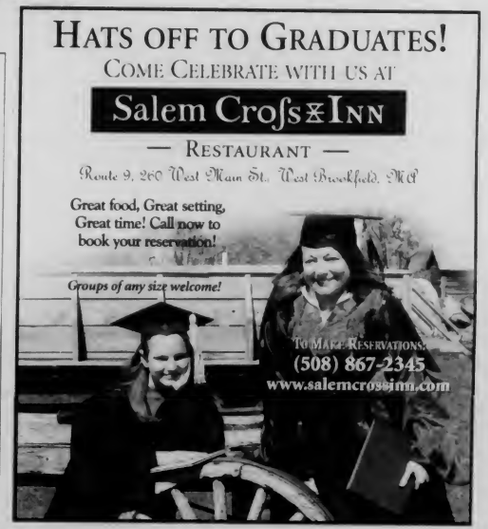
Down 22 points with 12 minutes to go against Syracuse at the Carrier Dome in the NIT quarterfinals, people everywhere turned off their TV's. Oops. The Minutemen engineered a comeback for the ages, storming back with 3-pointers from every direction to advance to the NIT semifinals against Florida at Madison Square Garden a game they would ultimately win.

Men's soccer reaches final four

The Minutemen were ninth in preseason A-10 poll. They lost four of their first six games, and it looked like another so-so season on Rudd Field. But after winning their first three games in A-10 play, including an upset No. 12 Saint Louis, the Minutemen carried their momentum into the A-10 Tournament. They defeated Rhode Island in the semifinals and Charlotte in the title game. UMass eventually lost in the national semifinals but not after a memorable and unlikely run to the 2007 College Cup.

Women's lacrosse comeback in A-10 Semis





Senior attack Kathleen Typadis scored with 1 second remaining in overtime to complete UMass's second-half comeback against top-seeded Richmond. The Minutewomen trailed, 8-4, after the first half but held Richmond to a single goal in the second before Typadis tied the score. Typadis scored the game-winning goal, 1:48 into the overtime.

Men's lacrosse beats Hofstra in season-opener after controversy

The offseason was not good for UMass coach Greg Cannella and his team. But after eight players were suspended indefinitely for their alleged involvement in an off-campus incident, the Minutemen rallied together in their 8-4 win over Hofstra. Junior attack Tim Balise scored four goals in the win.

Nicholas Belanger

Editor in Chief

"That's what college is about: change and self discovery. For some, simply leaving home and pursuing a degree is enough to spark that change. However, for me, the catalyst was The Daily Collegian."

College has been the best four years of my life – so good, in fact, that I'm coming back for an additional semester as a proud super-senior. During this time I've learned more about myself than I have about any academic discipline that I've pursued. I think that holds true for most who choose to follow convention and enter into the world of higher education. Yes, we are all here to get an education, but what is taught to us and what we choose to learn are often two very different things.

I came to UMass to study journalism. I had dreams of becoming a Washington correspondent for a major newspaper. I was, at the time, passionate about politics and I identified myself as a raging New York Times-loving liberal. Thanks to my early work at The Collegian I realized that reporting wasn't for me. I felt invasive interviewing people, and hated the boring style of writing required for the job. Fortunately, I was just discovering a passion for graphic design, also at The Collegian, as a night-graphics-staffer.

I'll fast-forward to the present. I'm now an aspiring graphic designer and copy writer; I want to make truckloads of money pitching and developing advertising campaigns. To the chagrin of my journalism professors, I think the New York Times is garbage, but I love USA Today. I hate raging liberals, I find that calling myself a moderate suits my newfound political apathy best. A lot of other things have changed as well, and those that know me best now wouldn't recognize the kid I was four long years ago.

That's what college is about: change and self discovery. For some simply leaving home and pursuing a degree is enough to spark that change. However, for me, the catalyst was The Daily Collegian.

I've been a staff member at this paper for three and a half years, leaving for one semester to co-op with The Boston Globe. During my time here I've risen from a news correspondent to Editor in Chief. But the titles are meaningless outside a resume. I say that because I honestly believe that every single individual that chooses to dedicate him or herself to this newspaper is equally important to the success of this publication.

The people, like me, who eat sleep and breathe The Collegian will always have my respect and admiration. And it is those same people that have made my job worthwhile over these past few years. I'd love to be able to say I have deep love and passion for journalism, but I don't. I've worked long hours for little pay, accepted ample amounts of abuse and criticism because I love this place, and the people that I work with.

Here come the shout-outs – bear with me.

I got my start here as a night graphics staffer under the supervision of Cory Rosenberg and Samantha Nielson, who groomed me into the eventual production manager. I'll never forget the end of fall semester party my freshman year when Cory loaded me up with cheap drinks and told me he loved me. That's probably when I first realized that the life of a Collegian staffer was for me.

I was much more involved in the paper my sophomore year as a manager. That year I was able to go on a trip to L.A with Eric Athas, Dan O'Brien and Mike Busack. Those few days on the West Coast were probably the most fun I've had in my life. Instead of sitting in conferences all day we drank, partied, broke hotel property, got kicked out of the hot tub half a dozen times and got in an argument with a street preacher. Also, I discovered that Carl's Jr. is the best fast food chain in the country.

That whole year feels like it was yesterday to me. The Collegian was a mess, full of drama, arguments and problems from the onset. Still, certain individuals made it tolerable. Dan, other than being my Carl's Jr. partner in crime, is still a great friend, and one of my favorite drinking buddies of all time. Eric Athas (who eventually went on to take my place as EIC when I split for The Globe) is by far the smartest individual I've worked with. I would have been happy to work for him this year, had he not decided to leave the paper to pursue other projects. Lauren and Amanda were the other managers in our graphics department; not only did they make my life easier, they are a blast to hang around, and always made life at the Collegian a little more exciting.

Jeff Howe taught me that the best way to watch softball is with a Southern Comfort and Coke, and he oversaw what I still consider the best Score ever.

I could go on all day talking about the staff that year: Megan Daley, Ian Jones, Dan Duggan and a slew of others helped make that year great. More so than anyone else, Kerry O'Grady, former ad manager, made that year truly special for me. I would have lost my mind without her, and despite our ups and downs over the past few years, I'm happy to say our friendship is the best thing The Collegian has ever given me, and I miss her terribly.

As the newly-elected Editor in Chief I had no idea what the hell I was doing back in the fall of 2006. But thanks to a great cast of characters around me I managed to fake it until I figured it out. Eric Athas, again, had my back from day one, which I can't thank him enough for. Then, Matt Bellliveau, my roommate and our news editor, is one of the most genuinely great guys I've ever had the pleasure to spend time with. If you ever find yourself playing Madden against him he can't stop the long ball. Boom. Jamieson Porter has been a friend of mine since day one of freshman year. I was happy to have her as our ad manager and she's someone I hope to remain friends with years after college.

Despite his opinion of me as EIC, I still have nothing but the upmost respect for Rob Greenfield and what he accomplished as sports editor. Wherever he is today, I wish him the best of luck. Dan Conti, our former business manager, helped turn this place into a responsible, functional business, and he had the best haircut ever. Amanda Allen (again) did a great job as our production manger, and helped encourage my drinking to near-alcoholic levels for a short period of time.

All right, on to this year, and despite having spent the previous fall as Editor in Chief, I'll always remember this group as my staff.

First, I have to thank Chris Martin, who has been the closest thing I've ever had to a brother. From our days in Greenough to sitting in the Amherst College Police Station, we've been through it all. Never have two people been such bad influences on each other, but hey, it's been a ton of fun. To boot, Chris is the best production manger I've ever seen.

Dan Exter: without him The Collegian wouldn't exist right now, as business manager Dan always managed to make decisions with the best interest of this paper in mind, not to mention make my life a lot less stressful. He's also the most quotable man at the paper, executive board meetings were never lacking in flair thanks to Exter's loud but effective banter and unintentionally hilarious quotes: Rome wasn't built in a day, and you and Bender are indeed fire and gas.

Speaking of Bender, Alex Bender our advertising manager brought a laid-back, upbeat attitude to the office day in and day out. He always did his job well, met his goals more often than not and managed to make the hardest job at the paper look easy. If anyone here is destined to become a millionaire playboy, it's Alex. Ad rep-Brendan Cherry, who returns next year as the assistant ad manager, was a great guy to have around the office, and a natural salesman. He's destined for big things, so long as his passion for hypnosis doesn't get in the way.

My managing editor Katie Huston has been fantastic all year – the commencement speaker at graduation, a straight-A student, and one hell of a journalist, Katie proved that it is possible to be a good student and a Collegian junkie. Even though she prefers South Africa to America (the greatest country in the world), she's still all right in my book. Apricot jam, anyone?

Meghan Murphy has been one of my closest friends since my old roommate freshman year met her while he was rocking a towel. As our night and copy supervisor she made sure The Collegian didn't suck everyday. She did a thankless job with incredible poise and patience, and was always the voice of reason on exec board. Meg is the type of person to put others before herself, she's a great friend, and I don't know anyone who can say one bad thing about her.

Derrick Perkins, my news editor and a great drinking buddy. If I think back on every great party of the year, they always seem to involve belligerent Derrick. If you aren't lucky enough to know him, just picture Randy Marsh (Stan's dad on South Park) and you'll get a good sense of who Derrick is. Kate Olesin, assistant news, future night and copy supervisor, amazingly talented and a nice, sincere person. Holly Seabury, great reporter, fantastic editor and makes one hell of a cake.

Sean Sullivan, why do we call you S.P.? Anyway, your staff editorials made us all look way smarter than we are this year, you're the best ed/op editor we have ever had and a ton of fun to have around.

Joe Meloni – I can't say enough good things about Joe. He's smart, talented and an all-around kickass dude. It's nice to have another smoker around so I don't feel as bad about my horrible habit. Also, every time we hang out outside this place it's always a good time. Eli, "I can't say your last name" Rosenswaike, the anchor of the sports staff all year and a super talented writer/reporter. Eli's byline will probably be in the Globe someday, even though he'll be absolutely ripping the Red Sox, Pats and Celtics. His unnatural man-love of Chris Paul is disturbing, but this place wouldn't be nearly as entertaining without him.

James Hale, a.k.a. the Hale Storm invented the Internet, jumped a shark on water skis, defeated communism and managed to make The Collegian's Web site dominate the College Publisher ranks all on the same day. Even though James is family (we're cousins... sorta) I didn't know him too well before he started working for The Collegian; now I'm happy to say he's a great friend.

Jeremy Rice is the best lefty third baseman in the history of slow pitch softball. Also, he's been a great sports editor all year. My only regret is that we haven't partied more often because the night we all wound up singing ELO at my place was a blast.

Finally I want to thank Michael King. Next year, Mike takes the reins as editor in chief of this, the best college daily in the country. I had him pinned early on, and I see much of what I feel made me an effective leader in him. I have no doubt that he'll do a better job than I did. He's patient, intelligent and a perfect fit for the job. Most importantly, King has a love for The Collegian, and he is taking this job for all the right reasons.

I know I didn't mention everyone; I'm sorry for that. But please take a minute to look at the names in the gray box next to this column. All of these people work extremely hard day in and day out to make The Collegian what it is, and from the bottom of my heart I thank them all.

So that's it, my year as the editor in chief, and my career at New England's largest college daily newspaper has come to an end. For the better part of four years The Collegian has been my life, and looking back I can honestly say that I have no regrets. In many ways, I missed out on a typical college experience – nights my friends were partying I would be in the newsroom reading printouts of the Sports page. I disconnected myself from campus politics, rallies and other events for the sake of remaining objective. I missed out on joining other clubs I was interested in, simply because I didn't have any free time. I missed too many classes, turned in too many assignments late and apologized to too many professors for slacking off all because my first priority during college was doing the best job possible for The Daily Collegian. And if I had to do it all again, I wouldn't change a thing. It's with a heavy heart I leave. However, the memories I've made here at The Daily Collegian will last a lifetime.

Nick Belanger is the Collegian editor in chief. He is now officially retired.

Michael King

Editor in Chief Elect

Next year I'll be taking over as editor-in-chief of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian. I would have dismissed those words at this point one year ago. In fact, when I came to UMass in the fall of 2005, I never would have imagined that I would be a part of a newspaper at any point in my life. In the spring of that year, I saw an advertisement at the Worcester Dining Commons that The Collegian was looking for sports writers. I came down and started writing Atlantic 10 women's soccer notebooks until I proved dependable enough to handle a full-time beat.

At the end of my sophomore year, I was hired to be assistant sports editor starting in the fall of 2007. That outgoing group of sports editors took a chance on me and gave me the job despite having only a year's experience in the world of journalism.

Though I left sports after one semester, working for news has been a great experience. Though there were probably far too many weeks when I was writing six or seven articles, traveling to cover men's basketball games and working the desk a couple nights, I have no regrets and it was certainly worth the effort.

I made The Collegian the focus of my collegiate life and sacrificed a lot to improve this paper. To the last year's leadership, I wish I could have heard their reaction when they heard that I was elected EIC. I'm willing to bet there was a lot of laughing involved. I'm not a journalism major and my studies involve The Collegian more than anything else, like that accounting stuff I pretend to learn.

Since that time, I've grown a lot as a person and I'm confident that I can lead this paper through the next two semesters. We have an outstanding staff in place for next year and I'm excited to think about the amazing things we'll accomplish. But we didn't get here by ourselves. I want to thank The Collegian's outgoing senior staff that has meant so much to this newspaper and significantly shaped the direction its going. The Collegian's outgoing executive board worked tirelessly over the past two semesters to improve this paper, and they each deserve individual recognition.

Chris Martin. You were an admirable opponent in the EIC debates and very gracious in defeat. I can honestly say that you would have made an excellent editor-in-chief. You've meant a lot to this paper over the past four years and we can't thank you enough for all that you've done for The Collegian. None of us in the newsroom had to worry about production and what happened in the graphics room because we knew that you always had it under control. On behalf of the entire staff, we wish you good fortune in all of your pursuits.

Katie Huston: I finally learned how to spell your name correctly. You're probably the smartest person that's ever worked at this paper and it was a pleasure working under your leadership these past two semesters. You've got one heck of a future, and you'll be great at everything you do.

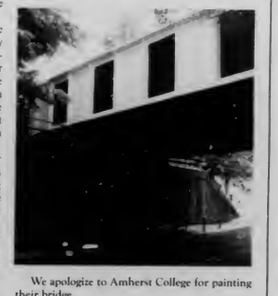
Meghan Murphy. You've been an incredible asset to this paper. You certainly don't get enough credit for all the work you've done to make this paper a success. Besides being an awesome night and copy supervisor, you made the Campus Center basement a lot more fun when you were around. Thanks for looking out for all of us; you're like everyone's big sister at The Collegian.

Alex Bender: Who knew that someone could still sell ads while goofing off 95 percent of the time? But seriously, you did an amazing job selling ads for this newspaper and helped us climb out of our financial hole.

Dan Exter: We owe you a lot keeping us on track with the numbers and not letting our spending get out of hand. You came into a tough circumstance and left us in a good situation financially. I'm going to miss your intensity, big guy.

As for those in the newsroom, it's been a blast working with you guys over the past year. I've gotten to know each section pretty well and I'm excited for next year. For those who won't be back with us, thanks for everything. I owe a lot to Jeremy Rice for giving me a chance last year to be a part of the sports staff. I know you took a risk in hiring me and I'm glad it worked out for the best. It's too bad I didn't get a chance to cover a beat with you, but who knows; maybe we'll have that chance somewhere down the road.

The same goes for Derrick Perkins. I'm glad you let me join Team News for this semester. I learned a lot witnessing you unabashedly remove commas from stories and swear under your breath as you realized that we didn't have enough content to cover half the front page. Remember, there's always a job here for you at the paper, Mr. Senior Consultant Guy.



And of course, James 'The Hale Storm' Hale – the best and only Web editor this paper has ever seen. I want to thank you for being the brunt of my verbal assaults; you did a great job making the Web site an asset of this newspaper, despite having the deepest voice known to man.

Last! Nick Belanger: You were the guiding hand of this paper as EIC for the past two years and we all owe you a lot for the success we've enjoyed. You oversaw the development of this paper into something very special and meaningful to this campus. Credit goes to you for leading this paper through some troubling times. I'm coming into a situation that's much better than the one you entered two years ago. You've made my job much easier. Thanks for having faith in my ability to lead this newspaper – I won't let you down. Though I can't promise that there won't be any more bridge scandals.

To all of the other seniors who've worked hard to improve this paper on a daily basis: thank you. This paper couldn't have succeeded without everyone's dedication.

To the returning editors, staff and writers, I hope you enjoy the summer and come back refreshed for the fall semester. There's going to be a lot of hard work involved, but there's no limit to what we can accomplish at The Collegian. I'm honored to be taking over this position and I can't wait to get started next semester.

Michael King can be reached at editor@dailycollegian.com.

We apologize to Amherst College for painting their bridge.

...but no regrets.

THE 2008 UMASS GRAD GUIDE

Brought to you by

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

In Association with

THE UMASS AMHERST ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Katie Huston
Business Manager Dan Exter
Production Manager Chris Martin
Night Supervisor Meghan Murphy
Advertising Manager Alex Bender
Advertising Production Katherine Shea
Editorial Production Michael Sarkes
Arts & Living Editor Ryan McAskill
Comics Editor Adam Seagen
Editorial Editor S.P. Sullivan
News Editor Derrick Perkins
Sports Editor Jeremy Rice
Features Editor Dave Humphreys
Photo Editor Michael Phillis
Web Editor James Hale
Asst. Business Manager Eric Szymczak
Assistant Advertising Marsee Whooten
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Stephanie McPherson
Asst. Arts & Living Skye McIntyre
Asst. Arts & Living Brian Wood
Asst. Editorial James Mathews
Asst. Editorial Melissa Garber
Assistant News Michael King
Assistant News Kate Olesin
Assistant News Holly Seabury
Assistant Sports Mike Connors
Assistant Sports Joe Meloni
Assistant Sports Eli Rosenswaike
Assistant Photo Brian Tedder
Arts Web Editor Michelle Abbatiello
Editorial Web Editor Leif Walcutt
News Web Editor Nick Bush
Sports Web Editor Steve Games

Photo Credit Michael Phillis
Brian Tedder
Amanda Lund
PJ Stanley

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1911, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Daily Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been independent since January 1944. For advertising rates and information, call 545-3500 between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

WELCOME CLASS OF 2012

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

ORIENTATION ISSUE | WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | SUMMER 2008

Holub appointed new chancellor

DAILY COLLEGIAN STAFF

Recently announced Chancellor Robert Holub met with the press and members of the UMass community on May 5 to answer questions and share his plans for the future.

Campus welcomes new leadership

By S.P. Sullivan
COLLEGIAN STAFF

(Editor's note: This story originally ran on May 6, 2008.)

After having served in the wake of John V. Lombardi's controversial departure, Interim Chancellor Thomas Cole greeted the press on the 10th floor of the Campus Center yesterday with a quip.

"No one is more delighted than I to welcome you," he said before the announcement of the new chancellor.

President Jack Wilson then introduced Dr. Robert C. Holub, who had been approved earlier Monday morning by the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees after having been recommended to the board by Wilson.

Holub, currently the provost and vice chancellor for academic affairs at the University of Tennessee, Knoxville, fielded questions pertaining to university funding, undergraduate education and student safety, among others.

Holub spoke first about public higher education, for which he said he has a "particular passion."

"Public higher education has experienced a steady ascendency," said Holub. "There are more students educated at public universities every year, and the percentage of students who are educated at public universities increases every year."

"Public higher education in my view is the most powerful dimension of the American Dream, which allows individuals with talent and ambition to achieve success no matter where they start in life," said Holub.

Holub said that an investment in public higher education provides better than private institutions an opportunity to "alleviate health issues, augment the wealth of the state and even to increase things such as volunteerism."

"Truly, public higher education is the key to a citizenry that is healthy, wealthy and wise," he said.

Holub also spoke about funding, a particularly large issue for the University after the Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts (PHENOM) brought several hundred UMass students to Boston to lobby for affordable public higher education.

"At the end of the day, it's just as important or more important to use the funding that you have in as effective a manner as possible. My experience is that if you use the funding that you have effectively, that you are going to be able to secure more funding, both private and public funding, more easily," he added. "So I think those kinds of decisions are going to be paramount for me."

When asked what he thought was the primary issue facing the University, Holub was undecided

See CHANCELLOR on page 3

Students on strike

Protestors demand lower fees, transparency

By Will McGuinness
COLLEGIAN STAFF

(Editor's note: This story was originally published on November 14, 2007.)

The Student Government Association [SGA] in conjunction with the Graduate Student Senate [GSS] is calling on students to participate in an all-student strike scheduled for Thursday and Friday of this week.

Students' refusal to attend classes is hoped to attract media attention that will bring the governing bodies' demands into state-wide public consciousness.

Organizers of the strike said a rollback in student fees, accountability for diversity funds, student control over student space and police presence in dormitories have warranted the move to hold informational meetings in lieu of scheduled classes at the end of the week. The issue has largely polarized the student body with many

See STRIKE on page 2

Kellogg named head coach

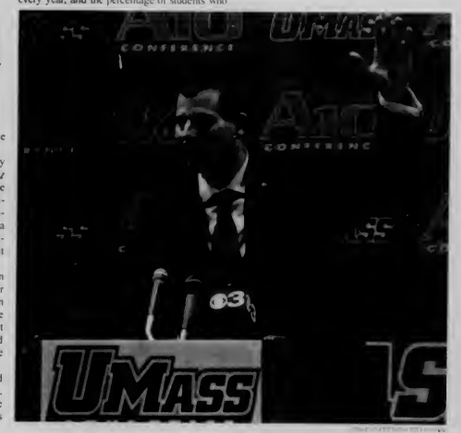
Ford abruptly leaves for OSU

By Eli Rosenswaike
COLLEGIAN STAFF

(Editor's note: This story was originally published on April 23, 2008.)

After Travis Ford said he was locked up as the Massachusetts men's basketball coach for "many years to come," he unexpectedly left for more money at Oklahoma State, leaving the position open.

That job opening will officially be closed at 6 p.m. tonight, when University of Massachusetts athletic director John McCutcheon introduces Memphis assistant coach – and former UMass player – Derek Kellogg as the next head men's basketball coach.



The press conference is open to the public and will be held at the Curry Hicks Cage on campus.

The story first broke Tuesday afternoon, as ESPN's Andy Katz reported that Kellogg would be introduced on Wednesday. No official announcement was made confirming that by McCutcheon, but a source close to the athletic department told The Daily Collegian that the report was "not wrong."

Kellogg, 34, joined John Calipari's staff at Memphis for the 2000-01 season and has been there ever since. Before his time there, Kellogg was an assistant at George Mason for two seasons and at Youngstown State for one. He has never been a head coach.

Although he lacks the head coaching experience that Ford had, the Kellogg signing should excite a fan base that is upset with Ford's

See KELLOGG on page 3

Derek Kellogg was named men's basketball coach after former coach Travis Ford left for Oklahoma State. Kellogg played for the Minutemen in the early '90s.

Activists hold rally for Tibet

Controversy over Olympics in China continues at UMass

By Elizabeth Hawley
COLLEGIAN STAFF

(Editor's note: This story was originally published on April 28, 2008.)

As the world prepares for the 2008 Summer Olympic Games in Beijing, China, all eyes have been on China. The international spotlight has renewed controversy over China's role in Tibet, with rallies and protests erupting along the Olympics' torch relay route. Last Friday afternoon, local activists marched nearly nine miles in support of Tibet.

Friday's rally was held to raise awareness for the Tibetan cause but also to demand the release of the Panchen Lama, who is considered the second most Tibetan spiritual authority, after the Dalai Lama. Friday was the Panchen Lama's 19th birthday. Tibetan activists say the boy was abducted at the age of six-years-old, making him the youngest political prisoner in the world.

JULIAN THEOKARY/COLLEGIAN

Five College for Free Tibet members, along with other local activists, marched almost nine miles to spread awareness for the Tibetan cause and the release of the Panchan Lama.

"[The Panchen Lama] has not been seen or heard from since he was abducted by Chinese authority in 1995," said Dadon Ngodup, who spoke on behalf of the Students for a Free Tibet.

More than 50 protestors gathered on the steps of the Student Union for the rally, which kicked of at noon with the singing of the Tibetan national anthem. Lhakyi Lokyitsang, the master of ceremonies, then introduced a group of speakers.

"Behind the Himalayas with no foreign tourists, no independent press, we fear a massacre is going on in Tibet," Thondup Tsering said. Tsering called for an independent fact finding mission to be sent into Tibet, as well as calling for the release of all prisoners and an end to the killings.

Tsering also said that the Free Tibet movement "is not an anti-China or an anti-Chinese movement," but a movement against the Chinese government's policies in Tibet.

According to a flyer from Students for a Free Tibet, "Over 1.2 million Tibetans have died as a direct result of the occupation, over 6,000 monasteries have been destroyed, and thousands of

See TIBET on page 3

Campus system sees 5 percent hike

By Holly Seabury
COLLEGIAN STAFF

(Editor's note: This story was originally published on May 12, 2008.)

A five percent increase for the University of Massachusetts system was included in the state budget for fiscal year 2009.

The increase, passed in the budget that was completed on May 2, will give $24.2 million more to the five-campus system spending plan, half of which typically goes to the flagship Amherst campus. Under this House budget, funding for the five-campus system will increase from $469 million to $493.2 million.

Funding for student financial aid was increased by $3 million, from $93.8 million to $96.8 million. The House also gave $15,000 to further the possibility of establishing a system of state universities, a plan under consideration by the state colleges last year.

The dual enrollment program at public higher education institutions received $1 million.

Student Trustee-elect Lindsay McCluskey said that she is satisfied with the increase, though she and groups Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts and Massachusetts Students Uniting actually asked for a larger increase, of $17.1 million.

"I am happy with the allocation for PHENOM," said McCluskey. "But public higher education is unaffordable for many, students cannot afford a better education. Our hope is that each year the state will increase this funding and that someday, public higher education will be free in Massachusetts."

PHENOM has been lobbying legislators to work toward the passing of several legislations that would go toward the Massachusetts higher education system. Such legislations include a bill to allow the state to borrow $2 billion for much-needed repairs and construction on all five university campuses, a bill that would establish a loan forgiveness program for students who meet certain criteria and a bill that would make textbook publishers cease the requirement to buy additional materials, such as CD-ROMs and workbooks with a textbook, among other proposed bills.

Meanwhile, the Ways and Means Committee has not yet completed its financial plan but is expected to release its proposed fiscal year 2009 next week. During the week-long debate, lawmakers did not add any funds to the budget proposed by the Committee, but a number of

See BUDGET on page 3

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ORIENTATION ISSUE
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3499 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael King
MANAGING EDITOR Joe Meloni
BUSINESS MANAGER Alex Wasteczuk
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kate Olesin
ADVERTISING MANAGER Dan Hurley
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Stephanie McPherson
COMICS EDITOR Nick Bush
EDITORIAL EDITOR Melissa Garber
NEWS EDITOR William McGuinness
SPORTS EDITOR Eli Rosenwaike
FEATURES EDITOR Andrea Murray
PHOTO EDITOR Brian Tedder
WEB EDITOR Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER William Mulholland
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Brendan Cherry
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Kevin Koerwara
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Heather Waxman
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL Leigh Greaney
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASSISTANT NEWS Stella Cernak
ASSISTANT NEWS Lisa DeBenedictis
ASSISTANT NEWS Ben Williams
ASSISTANT SPORTS Ryan Fleming
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeffrey R. Larnard
ASSISTANT SPORTS Melissa Turtinen
ASSISTANT PHOTO Michael Phillis
ASSISTANT PHOTO P.J. Stanley

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALMA LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN AWARDED ELEVEN SWEEPSTAKES AWARDS SINCE 1990. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 413-545-3500 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today
NIGHT EDITORS
Michael King, Kate Olesin
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION
Kathy Shea
PRODUCTION TEAM
Brandon Sylvia, Paula D. Lavalle

GET YOUR NEWS ON THE GO!
LOG ON TO OUR WEB SITE
www.dailycollegian.com

Students want to get more, pay less

STRIKE from page 1

in agreement and a seemingly equal number in opposition.

Opinion may be split, but few students can disagree with smaller bills, an action that SGA vice-President Ruth Thompson said is both possible and deserved. Governor Patrick's Capital Plan is expected to bring $1 billion in revenue to the University of Massachusetts system and approximately $500,000,000 to the system's flagship Amherst campus. Due to the added revenue, strike organizers have said on their Facebook.com group that Patrick's plan shows the state's commitment to better funding public higher education and thus warrants a rollback in student fees.

University spokesman Ed Blaguszewski explained the University's stance saying that the Board of Trustees [BOT] has worked to raise fees at a modest pace. Organizers cite fees having gone up 200 percent over the past 20 years; however, Blaguszewski said that in recent history the BOT has worked to raise fees at a level that is either under or equal to inflation as defined by the Consumer Price Index. Last March, the BOT voted to raise fees for this year by 3.4 percent, which is under the reported inflation rate of 3.6 percent.

Blaguszewski said budget cuts in the past have necessitated a package of action to reduce University spending while maximizing revenue. He said the increase in student fees was not done in isolation but was instead part of this program that included a large number of layoffs and forced retirement among other things.

The GSS's Web site reads that the increase in fees has had a major effect on campus diversity as it allegedly prices students out of public higher education.

Blaguszewski said the University's policy "has to do with the decision to invest funds in different ways." He said, "A year or two ago, the University received a federal grant to encourage more under represented minority students to pursue careers in sciences and mathematics."

Blaguszewski added that a lack of funds necessitates the need to get outside grants.

"It's a policy issue," he said. "The University pooled the money and decided to allocate the funds to emphasize a nationwide need for professionals in the highlighted fields."

GSS President Jeff Napolitano said on the GSS Web site, "For the administration to fulfill the requirement of diversity as a core mission of the University, we call on them to institute a transparent, accountable and democratic process that incorporates student input and oversight."

Thompson said that while the administration may have made decisions to maximize revenue to aid shrinking budgets, decisions regarding the running of student space such as the Lincoln Campus Center and the Student Union should be left to the original caretakers of the areas – students.

"When something in the Student Union that is funded through student fees, we should not have to pay the added fees often placed on students," Thompson said. She added that campus center rooms are not rented with student priority in mind.

"The University has the hotel, conference services and other ways to get revenue. We're already paying enough in fees to be here, so we don't need to pay more money in order to have an event."

Blaguszewski agreed that it is hard to reserve a room in either building but he said the reason was due to the fact that the spaces in the buildings were small, and competition was to blame for students' difficulties rather than that of the building administrators' priorities.

The SGA added to its list of grievances a desire to return "freshmen only" dormitories back to buildings that feature students of all grades.

DAMIEN DUPRAS/COLLEGIAN

UMass students participated in a general student strike on Nov. 15 and 16, protesting fees, lack of diversity funding and police in dorms, among other demands.

The strike's Facebook.com group reads: "With little student input and consideration, the Office of Student Affairs and Campus Life has ordered the implementation of a policy 'All Freshman' dorms, particularly in the Southwest Residential Area. This is an abrupt shift in long-standing policy which negatively changes peer dynamics and creates an artificial divide amongst the student body. We call on an end to 'All Freshman' dorm housing and for student input and influence into future housing policies."

As supporters of the strike demand a greater say in who lives in certain dormitories, they also demand to have control over who doesn't enter student rooms.

Thompson said that illegal searches are being conducted by plain clothed officers of the University of Massachusetts Police Department. She added that students' fourth amendment rights are being overlooked as officers patrol private areas of student dorms.

Deputy Chief of Police Patrick Archibald said the demands are not valid as police officers do not enter the halls unless they are responding to a call from a Resident Assistant or a concerned student. According to Archbald officers must be certain probable cause exists before going through the Assistant District Attorney's Office for a search warrant.

He added that officers do check on the lobbies and cluster offices of dormitories but do not patrol private areas of dorms. He added that officers responding to calls often knock on the doors of suspects who often open it to officers and charges.

Thompson said the all-student strike is not a rash reaction to policies recently introduced by members of the administration but rather a last resort.

"These are the issues every year," she said. "Every time we try to change an issue, we have people blowing us off or ignoring us. That's really what the strike is for: to educate the student body, to get the media to show people that these are the issues that we want to change."

"Since my first year [three years ago] we've had rallies, teach –ins. There has been so many things that have happened. They take us as kids. We represent the students who are tired, who are frustrated."

Though the strike is in effect a boycott as student refuse the services of the University rather than their refusing to provide a service to UMass, Ruth Thompson said this is her legacy.

"I'm graduating in May, and I want to know that something has changed. I want to know that there has been change. I don't want all the work that I've done and all the work others in student government has been in vain."

Will McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn@gmail.com.

Green architecture, technology

By Nick Bush
Collegian Staff

(Editor's note: This story was originally published on November 7, 2007.)

Campus may seem a little greener in the future as the University of Massachusetts has not hesitated to integrate environmentally-friendly technology into "New Dirt" construction.

"Green building" is the practice of improving the efficiency of buildings and their use of energy, water and materials. The goal of green design is to reduce a building's impact on human health and the environment, through methods of design, construction, operation, maintenance and removal.

There are numerous ways to ensure the creation of an environmentally friendly building. One is to use building materials that did not provide environmentally toxic waste products, and will not create them in the future. By constructing a properly insulated building, the potential loss of energy to leaking can be stopped.

"Building green involves asking a lot of questions," said UMass architecture professor Ray Kinoshita. "What are the building materials, and where are they coming from? Can they be recycled? How can we reduce the energy that this building consumes?

Green architecture is one of the most important shifts in the field right now, according to Kinoshita. "In a few years, it will be the standard," he said. "Photovoltaic cells are useful, but they are very expensive still. Geothermal energy systems that harness ground warmth also could contribute in future designs."

A method of improving the "greenness" of buildings becoming more common is the addition of energy supplementation systems. These sometimes-expensive measures can add up so a significant initial investment is often necessary to make sure a building goes green.

However, methods like placing panels of photovoltaic cells on the rooftop of a building give back to those that install them; such panels can capture sunlight and turn it into electricity that the building can use, and will eventually pay for themselves over the course of many years.

UMass's first photovoltaic system rests on the roof of the Knowles Engineering Building, and recently the Mullins Center parking lot replaced its streetlights with photovoltaic models, saving the University $2,400 in energy costs.

Another common energy-supplementation method is heat-recovery systems, which capture waste heat and transform it into useful energy.

UMass is building an Integrated Science Building that will employ a heat recovery wheel for lab areas, which will remove latent heat in the summer and add heat during the winter.

Rainwater from the ISB's roof will also be recycled and stored, lowering the amount of water discharged into the campus sewer system. The building will also feature a "roof garden" of grass turf, which can help keep a building cool in the summer and warm in the winter.

During the planning of the in the recently constructed North Residential Area Apartments, designers also integrated green technology. Each apartment has two zones of temperature control of its space, with one zone in the living room areas and one zone for the bedrooms. This environmentally-friendly system minimizes overheating and overcooling.

The North Apartments also feature a building automation system that lets occupants know when they should open their windows, with indicator lights in each lobby.

The new Studio Arts Building under construction will incorporate many green design concepts. South-facing widows will be equipped with sun-shading devices that allow winter sun energy to be brought in to the building, but shade the building from summer heat. The building will also employ occupancy sensors to turn lights off automatically when rooms are unoccupied.

A $43 million energy conservation project for the entire campus is now being undertaken by the UMass Physical Plant. The project includes more energy-efficient lighting and lighting controls, and water conservation measures including low flow toilets. To date there has been a 24 percent reduction in steam, 9 percent reduction in electricity, and 36 percent reduction in water consumption compared to 2004.

The new Central Heating Plant under construction should reduce the amount of greenhouse gases by 700 percent, and will implement the latest pollution control technologies. These include advanced combustion turbine low NOx burners, which are gas burners that significantly reduce the formation of nitrogen oxides, and advanced selective catalytic reduction and oxidation catalyst pollution control technologies.

The plant will also use recycled municipal wastewater for its boilers, which should reduce the demand for processed water on the local public drinking water system – currently fed by groundwater wells – by up to 200,000 gallons per day. A heat recovery steam generator will use the exhaust heat from the gas turbine to produce steam for campus heating year-round.

Nick Bush can be reached at news@dailycollegian.com

The new studio arts building is one of many "New Dirt" construction projects at UMass featuring green technology.

3 lacrosse players arrested

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

(Editor's note: This story was originally published on February 13, 2008.)

Three University of Massachusetts men's lacrosse players have now been arrested for alleged involvement in an off-campus incident at 304 N. Pleasant St. on Feb. 1.

Christopher R. Casey was arrested in Duxbury, Mass. – his hometown – over the weekend.

"[Casey] was arrested by the Duxbury Police Department," Amherst Police Detective Gabriel Ting said. "He didn't turn himself in; he was placed under arrest for an outstanding warrant."

Duxbury Police refused to comment on the arrest.

Casey, 19, was charged with assault and battery, as well as breaking and entering during the nighttime with intent to commit a felony. He was arraigned Monday at Eastern Hampshire District Court in Belchertown, pleading not guilty.

He joins teammates Christian Haggerty and Ryan Marcus, the other individuals arraigned for the alleged crime. Each pled not guilty.

The three are accused of participating in a beating of three college-aged males with lacrosse sticks and bottles at the North Pleasant Street residence. Each was suspended from the men's lacrosse team on Feb. 2, along with five other teammates.

Court documents revealed the conditions of each individual's release until their pre-trial hearings. The conditions include: staying away from the scene of the alleged crime, avoiding contact with the victims of the attack and maintaining a nightly curfew.

Haggerty's provisions mandate that he must live with his parents if he is suspended from the University. He also must surrender weapons to police and avoid drugs and alcohol. Unlike Marcus and Casey, the sophomore was charged with assault and battery with a dangerous weapon in addition to the other two felonies.

University spokesman Ed Blaguszewski was not available for comment.

Amherst Police declined to say if its ongoing investigation could lead to additional arrests. The original release from the department cited approximately 12 alleged assailants.

The five other suspended lacrosse players continue to maintain that status, according to UMass Athletics Sports Information Director Jason Yellin. Juniors Jim Connolly and Justin Kelleher, redshirt sophomore Jordan Hendry and freshmen Jay Lucas and Alex Whitney are in that group.

However, Yellin would not confirm that the suspensions of the three arrested players were related to the North Pleasant Street incident.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

IT'S YOUR BODY.
IT'S YOUR LIFE.

CONFIDENTIAL • SAFE • AFFORDABLE
Birth Control • Pregnancy Testing • GYN & Breast Exams • HIV/Counseling & Rapid Testing • STD Screening & Treatment • Emergency Contraception
FREE Condoms

AMHERST:
27 Pray Street
Amherst, MA 01002
(413) 548-9992
Monday/Tuesday 10 AM - 4:30 PM
Wednesday 9 AM - 4:30 PM
Thursday 9 AM - 6:30 PM
Friday 10 AM - 4:30 PM

NORTHAMPTON:
16 Center Street, Suite 415
Northampton, MA 01060
(413) 586-2539
Monday/Thursday: 10 AM - 7 PM
Tuesday/Wednesday: 10 AM - 4 PM
Friday: 9 AM - 4 PM

35 Years
TAPESTRYhealth.org
CARE WITHIN REACH
1-800-696-7752

AMHERST · ATHOL · GREAT BARRINGTON · GREENFIELD
HOLYOKE · NORTH ADAMS · NORTHAMPTON · PITTSFIELD
SPRINGFIELD · WESTFIELD · WEST SPRINGFIELD

Holub takes questions

CHANCELLOR from page 1

"It's difficult for me to say precisely because I haven't been on campus and I haven't spoken with enough people to see what I'm going to have to do," he said. "I can say that in the next year, the most important thing for me will be to put together a good team. There are a number of people in interim positions; I'll need to find people for permanent positions."

Holub said he was unfamiliar with security issues that have arisen in the past after sporting events, but spoke of the importance of preserving student safety.

"Safety on campus of course is a rather large issue, and relates to more than winning championships. It relates to a lot of rather tragic events that have happened on other campuses during the last year or so, and it's something I think leaders of all campuses have to take very seriously," he said.

Addressing concerns that improving UMass as a research institution would take focus away from its undergraduate programs, Holub said he was confident that the two could coexist, and in fact compliment each other.

"I don't think there's an antagonism between great teaching and research," he said. "More often than not, I think that the people that are doing pioneering and cutting-edge work in their fields are better teachers," he said, "because they're very excited about the research and very excited about communicating it to students."

President Wilson said later that "one of the things that impressed me about [Holub] is that when he was at Berkeley he actually increased the contact between senior faculty and undergraduates."

"He facilitated all these undergraduate programs to get students in contact with faculty and into undergraduate research," said Wilson.

Holub said that affordability is another important issue for the University to address in order to improve the quality of the education it provides.

"We don't want students not to be able to come to this campus because they're too poor for this campus," said Holub, adding that the most important way to prevent this from happening is to pay attention to the structure of financial aid.

Holub met with students, faculty and community members at a reception after the press conference, though few students were in attendance.

Most recently a provost and vice chancellor at the University of Tennessee, Holub also spent 27 years at the University of California Berkeley, first as a faculty member in the German department and later holding several administrative positions. In 2003, he was named dean of Berkley's Undergraduate Division of the College of Letters and Sciences.

Holub's specialization is in 19th and 20th century German intellectual, cultural and literary history. He has researched and written on the poet Heinrich Heine, philosopher Friedrich Nietzsche and social theorist Jürgen Habermas. He holds an undergraduate degree in natural science, two M.A.s in comparative literature and German and a Ph.D. in German. He was born in Neptune, N.J.

Holub will replace Interim Chancellor Thomas Cole, who has filled the position vacated by John V Lombardi last fall.

S.P. Sullivan can be reached at spsully@dailycollegian.com

House approves new budget

BUDGET from page 1

allocations were approved, including $500,000 for the Cranberry Station at Wareham, $50,000 for 4-H and $250,000 for Future of Work initiatives at the labor centers in Amherst, Boston, Dartmouth and Lowell.

Another $368,000 was given to Gaston Institute at UMass Boston, $60,000 for the Grace Grossman Youth Collaborative at the Nantucket field station, $500,000 for Portuguese Studies at Dartmouth, $50,000 for the Center for Business Research at Dartmouth and $541,000 for the Collins Center for Public Management of the McCormack Institute in Boston.

House members succeeded in raising state employees' share of health insurance premiums. State employees currently pay 15 percent of health insurance costs.

The original proposal for the state budget was actually $27.9 billion, a 0.3 billion difference from the passed budget of $28.2; however the budget proposal for the University system was not affected.

Holly Seabury can be reached at hseabury@dailycollegian.com.

The state legislature raised the budget for the UMass system in May of this year by $24.2 million. Half typically goes to the flagship campus, UMass Amherst

Kellogg takes over the helm

KELLOGG from page 1

sudden departure and that is looking for a candidate with UMass ties that wants to stay for the long haul.

Kellogg played high school basketball at Springfield Central High School and starred for the Minutemen in his four seasons playing under Calipari from 1991-95. He was a two-time captain point guard, and UMass made the NCAA Tournament in all four of his seasons – three of which came with him as the starter.

Kellogg is noted for his strong recruiting skills, and helped bring star Derrick Rose and prep phenom Tyreke Evans to Memphis. Rose, a freshman point guard, is expected to be a top-2 selection in the upcoming NBA Draft.

Other candidates thought to be a possibility for the position were Davidson's Bob McKillop, Ohio's Tim O'Shea, University of Connecticut assistant coach Pat Sellers and Tim Maloney, who was the associate head coach for the last three years under Travis Ford. Maloney was a finalist at Jacksonville State, but recently missed out on the job. He could potentially follow Ford to OSU or stay on board under Kellogg.

Ford left for OSU late last week, signing a seven-year, $9.1 million contract. The restructured contract he worked out with UMass after turning down the Providence job was never signed, just verbally agreed to.

Kellogg will be the 21st head coach in the history of the UMass men's basketball program.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosenswa@dailycollegian.com

Protestors march to raise awareness

Protestors marched in an attempt to raise awarness about the situation in Tibet.

TIBET from page 1

Tibetans have been imprisoned and tortured for their beliefs," since China invaded Tibet in 1949. The Dalai Lama, the spiritual and political leader of Tibet, escaped to India with his government in 1959.

Many supporters of China argue that life has improved for most Tibetans since China took control of the government, and that the Western media is biased in Tibet's favor.

The group then marched almost two miles to the Amherst Town Common, where State Senator Ellen Storey and Amherst Town Manager Laurence Schaffer were waiting to speak. Police were stationed along the route, which took the marchers down East Pleasant St.

After Storey and Schaffer spoke the marching continued.

"We feel like marching is the best way to raise awareness," said Five College for Free Tibet member Tenzin Bhutti.

Tenzin Dolsang, a Tibetan student and a member of Students for a Free Tibet said the routes for the march to Amherst and the later march to Northampton were chosen because they were the most public, going through the center of Amherst, Hadley and Northampton.

Sonam Lama traveled in a pick-up truck carrying the signs and refreshments for the marchers. He parked the truck in a parking lot on Route 9 as he waited for the rally to catch up.

"I see quite a bit of support from community members," Lama said. As he waited, passing cars regularly honked, waved or cheered their support. A group of children stuck their heads out of the windows of a school bus and cheered.

At many points along the route, people came out of their houses to stop and watch. Once the group reached the center of Northampton, people stopped along the sidewalks to watch, and many new people joined in.

Sky Halm was riding her bike when she heard the rally pass; she turned her bike around to follow the group.

"I think it's a very important global issue," she said.

Once they reached Memorial Hall in Northampton, the group stopped to rest before beginning the final portion of the event. After the break, about 20 activists shaved their heads as a symbol of solidarity.

"It's in solidarity with the monks and the nuns in Tibet who have been tortured," said Lobsang Ngodub, who shaved his head. Ngodub escaped from Tibet in 1959 to India. In 1992, his wife moved to the United States. In 1995, he followed.

Iserings, who also had his head shaved, added that the move was also a protest against the Olympic torch, which he described as "tainted with blood," being brought through Tibet and onto Mount Everest, which he said Tibetan people feel is sacred.

Lama said he did not shave his head because it is not Tibetan culture, but Indian culture. Instead he did not wash his hair on Friday, which is Tibetan tradition.

Tibi Dobbie, of Northampton, is a Tibetan woman who was born in India. She moved to the U.S. in 1992. She was the only woman who shaved her head. When it was over, she saved a ponytail of hair in a bag.

She said she did it "to show support for Tibetan people."

Elizabeth Hawley can be reached at ehawley@student.umass.edu.

New text message system at UM

By Derrick Perkins
Collegian Staff

(Editor's note: This story was originally published on April 29, 2008.)

Officials at the University of Massachusetts have announced a successful wide-scale test of the campus' new emergency text-messaging system last week, making the service now fully operational.

According to Chief Information Officer John Dabach, on April 17 the campus service provider sent messages to 6,574 subscribers. Of that number approximately 6,570 had valid cell phone numbers.

An online survey examining message delivery time taken during the campus wide test indicated that 96 percent of the 1,175 responding subscribers received the alert within four minutes of the message having been sent.

The emergency text-messaging system, part of UMass Amherst's Campus Alerts system, sends time-sensitive alerts to subscribers cellular phones in the event of a safety or security risk to the University community or in case of potential disruption to daily campus activities.

According to University officials, the text-messaging is offered on a "best-effort" basis, and cannot guarantee that all subscribers will receive the alerts.

The University stepped up emergency preparedness following last year's Virginia Tech shooting that left 32 people dead after student Cho Seung-hui turned a gun on both faculty and his fellow classmates. The tragedy marked the worst school shooting in U.S. history.

Since then the University has undergone several security risks, including a bomb scare last fall and a rash of threatening messages found in bathrooms across campus earlier this semester.

UMass has joined universities across the country, like Amherst College and Northern Illinois, by implementing a text-message alert system.

Derrick Perkins can be reached at dperkins@dailycollegian.com.

Welcome to Award Winning UMass Dining. We are expecting you.

DINING COMMONS
Worcester, Franklin, Hampshire, Hampden and Berkshire

CAFES AND CONVENIENCE STORES

State of the Art Berkshire Dining Commons
Continuous dining from 7am to midnight*
Grab-n-Go and Breakfast on-the-Run
Create-your-own stir fry and noodle bowl stations
Many healthy options including vegetarian and vegan.
Theme specials including Restaurant Night and Taste of UMass
Premium nights with Steak & Lobster
All-you-care-to-eat Sushi and Dim Sum Brunch Kosher Dining
Five College Meal Exchange Program
Free nutritional consultation with our registered licensed dietitian
* Monday - Thursday at Berkshire

Bluewall Eatery
Bluewall Café
Marketplace Cafe
Starbucks Cart
Hatch Food Court
Outdoor Concessions
Mullins Center Concessions

Pita Pit at Worcester
Southwest Cafe
Whitmore Cafe
Physical Plant Café
Worcester C-Store
Franklin C-Store
Hampden C-Store
Mini Store at the Student Union
Herter Hall
Library Coffee Kiosk – Procrastination Station
Thompson Hall Coffee Kiosk

Be A Local Hero! Buy Locally Grown
Seafood WATCH
DINING SERVICES UMass/Amherst
Ivy
YCMP

umass.edu/diningservices

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

SUMMER 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself." - Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Clear our name

An uncomfortably large influx of violent events recently has cast the University of Massachusetts Amherst as a violent campus. The lacrosse scandal, the eight arrests after the Super Bowl, an alleged hate crime and numerous other violent acts have put the negative spotlight on our community. Likewise, yesterday's alleged threat scrawled on a bathroom wall in Bartlett has students, their parents and family members concerned for our safety.

Numerous stories have run in The Collegian, The Daily Hampshire Gazette, The Boston Globe and other publications, furthering the outside community's opinion that ours is a violent school.

This is not the case.

There is no clear-cut connection between any of these occurrences; they are anomalous, albeit they have occurred a little too close together for comfort.

The administration, although less than forthright initially after several instances of violence, has done its best to provide damage control, and to ensure students are kept safe, evidenced by the immediate closing of Bartlett Hall upon discovery of the threat.

There has been a forum discussion and rally to raise awareness of the alleged hate crime, and The Daily Collegian applauds these efforts. But racially motivated violence is not the only kind that ought to be condemned publicly by large groups of the student body; any violence, regardless of motivation, is unacceptable.

The University of Massachusetts has never quite been able to shake its reputation of being the nation's most violent large university ever since the 2005 ABC Primetime report that billed it as such. Alumni have written letters to the Boston Globe and comments on The Collegian's website condemning these acts, and the current student body ought to as well.

Racially motivated crimes spark discussions of how we can learn to coexist on campus, but it is not just racial tension that motivates these crimes. Racially motivated violence is abhorrent, but so is senseless, drunken and any other sort of adjective-prefixed violence.

There are only two possible remedies to the sudden upsurge in violent activity. The first is an increased police presence on campus and, judging from the demands of the numerous rallies of the United Student Action Coalition and the general climate of student opinion, that is definitely not the answer.

The second option – the more difficult, but more important one – is a realization on part of the student body that violent acts affect everyone: the victims of these crimes, their families and the rest of the student population. The quality of our livings spaces, our college experience and the outside opinion of our campus are all dependent upon a cease to all of this senseless violence.

The USAC's efforts this semester and last have proven that large groups of students on campus can organize for a greater good. It won't take a rally, however, to quell violence on campus; just a little mutual respect.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian editorial board.

Recognizing humanity

GLOBAL PERSPECTIVES

Greg Collins

Countless bullet holes penetrated the grey walls of abandoned apartment buildings as we walked in heavy silence throughout a Jewish settlement in the West Bank. "Gas the Arabs" was written on a wall in graffiti, and anti-Semitic messages were displayed at every street corner.

While touring the West Bank with American University in Cairo friends in the middle of my spring break, which also included stops in Israel and Jordan, I was exposed to the darker sides of humanity manifested by the Palestinian-Israeli conflict.

We first visited Ramallah, the de facto capital of Palestine, where we saw the grave of former Palestinian Liberation Organization chairman Yasser Arafat as well as the current headquarters of the Palestinian Authority.

In general, Ramallah was noticeably more industrialized than either my AUC friends or I had anticipated. Its downtown was bustling with countless Palestinians roaming the sidewalks searching for the perfect shawerma or comfortable pair of shoes. I, myself, downed freshly squeezed orange juice that tasted better than any fruit drink I have ever consumed in America.

In addition, although the presence of hijab-wearing women was evident, there were many Palestinian women without veils who wore clothes similar to those sported by Western females. In this fashion sense, Ramallah is much more Westernized than Cairo is.

Next we headed to Hebron, another busy city near where Jewish settlements were established by the Israeli government. First we passed through a small checkpoint, manned by two Israeli soldiers wielding guns. They checked our American passports and then let us through to the settlement areas.

This is where we noticed the endless bullet holes and ethnically derogatory signs. Hardly any people walked in the streets as we passed by the settlements. The eerie silence and lack of movement in the neighborhood resembled a ghost town haunted by a sepulchral past.

Throughout our walk we were confronted multiple times by Israeli soldiers, each instance in a respectful manner. The Israeli government is extremely cautious about movement of Arabs within the settlements, since Palestinians have been accused of inciting violence and targeting innocent Israelis in the West Bank.

After we passed by one group of Israeli soldiers, I saw from the corner of my eye, a Palestinian being interrogated by the same two soldiers, again in a relatively polite way.

Afterwards we arrived in Bethlehem, the birthplace of Jesus, and visited the Church of the Nativity. Not even five minutes from the church was a small Arab marketplace, where we could easily see large posters on buildings of Palestinian men proudly waving their weapons in the air.

I was exposed to the darker sides of humanity manifested by the Palestinian-Israeli conflict.

These posters are printed by jihadist movements, like the terrorist group Hamas, and political parties, like Fatah, and its paramilitary proxies. The Arabic writing on these posters labeled the Palestinian men who had died in fighting the Israeli military as martyrs.

The prevalence of these images expanded dramatically in Nablus, a city north of Ramallah where heavy fighting between Israel and Palestine broke out a few years ago.

Hamas and Islamic jihad posters lined the walls of buildings everywhere – downtown, side streets, school zones, etc. Because I came from a background where I never had similar looking posters, I was shocked at the public displays of pictures of weapons.

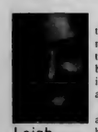
What was most tragic was the juxtaposition of smiling and laughing children who were no more than six years old walking through an alleyway on the way home from school, with these posters lining the alleyway.

At the very least, Nablus authorities could have removed these posters from school zones. But their failure to do so and the militant/political movements response for putting them up there in the first place, is an awful commentary on the indoctrination of impressionable youth within Palestinian society.

That being said, the signs of ethnic hatred of Arabs I observed while walking throughout Jewish settlements is as equally as tragic. In fact, protective netting had been placed previously over Arab marketplaces we passed through in Hebron because Jews from apartments above had thrown bricks and other dangerous objects down at the Arab quarters.

We could clearly see these bricks and other piles of trash resting on top of the netting, knowing full well that without this protection, the Arabs living in this area would be threatened.

Without comprehending at the time how contentious the area's environment was, I learned three days ago a Palestinian was killed in Hebron by Israeli soldiers after refusing their orders to lay down his knife.



Did my experiences traveling throughout the West Bank change my mindset about the Palestinian-Israeli conflict? I still believe the Israeli military does not target innocents nearly as frequently as Hamas does.

Ideologically, however, the deeply ingrained prejudices of both Palestinians and Jews against each other, as evidenced by the bullet holes and "Gas the Arabs" signs, will undermine any attempts for a permanent peace. And until both sides see the other side as people first, and not objectified, faceless enemies, any hopes for long-term tranquility are just that – empty hopes.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu.

Real world, real estate

Leigh Greaney

It seems like all the good things in life are so much more difficult to obtain than the easy ones. Maybe because the more that goes into something, the more appealing it becomes.

Maybe it's because we all want what we can't have. But when all you want is to get out of the dorms and into your own humble abode, why does it seem like pulling teeth?

Burden number one lies in the hands of UMass. Whoever came up with the idea to make it mandatory to live on campus until a certain number of credits have been obtained must be unaware of the strife it causes to those living inside of the dorm walls.

You can have your own room, your own kitchen, your own bathroom, and your own debt.

Spending forty-five units in residency isn't exactly a death sentence. At the same time, that's two years of your life.

Once you've made it past the finish line of your forty – five credit triathlon, you have a few choices. You could upgrade your living situation and move to the North Apartments, or if you're feeling crazy, you could get yourself an apartment somewhere off campus.

Maybe if you live close enough, you can move back into your house. If you don't live close enough and you're feeling especially fanatical, you can get a house of your own.

There comes a time when you have to pick your poison. You can continue living in the dorms where you hand your freedom over to the residence staff on a silver platter.

You can continue to use the public bathrooms which may or may not be located a football field away from your room. You can continue to battle quiet hours. You can live off dining hall food until 9 p.m. every night and then scrounge for whatever fits into your baby sized refrigerator.

If that doesn't sound like a fate you can stand, you could always get an apartment. That's when you meet the animal known as the 12-month lease. This binding beast reels you in for a year of monthly rent and utilities whether you like it or not.

If you had plans of only having an apartment while you're in school, then you have to search for places free of this agreement. If you have plans for the summer or breaks that occur outside of the Amherst area, then you are basically out of luck when it comes to paying rent for a space you're not using.

Before you are even able to get an apartment in the first place, you need a guarantor if you've never rented before or if you don't make an adequate income.

This leads to painful phone calls to family members (or anyone willing to be harassed for money) begging for signatures and notaries. If they plan on paying for it, then you're off the hook and sitting pretty for the next year.

If you're paying for it, then your guarantor has gone from a once loving person to someone who will hunt you down every time rent is due with possible death threats and extremely long voicemails.

Basically, you can have the freedom of being outside the dorm, but now the ball and chain has been switched from the residential staff to the land lord. You can have your own room, your own kitchen, your own bathroom and your own debt.

The holes in your pocket only worsen if you live far enough off campus that you require some mode of transportation other than a bus to get to class. Anyone who has ever been a commuter to UMass will tell you, parking services is the antichrist.

After you've paid unnecessary amounts for a parking spot, chances are you won't even get a spot even close to where you're going. If you decide to get honorary and defy the color code of the parking lots, then you'll have a nice parking ticket to add to your collection.

Moving out of the dorms is a hassle. Whether you see it as a part of growing up or a part of your wallet, it's hard to ignore the road blocks on the way to the freedom of living on your own.

The best thing you can do to get out of the dorms is buckle down, get all the information you need, be prepared with any paper work, and win the lottery.

Leigh Greaney is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lgreaney@student.umass.edu.

FAFSA hell

Hannah Nelson

Mud puddles and bitter cold: it's that season again. No, not cold and flu season, but financial aid season, complete with PIN, Social Security, and IRS form numbers. FAFSA - it is probably the scariest acronym on the face of the planet, though FICAH is quite possibly the most hated.

College students and their parents shudder at the thought of visiting the FAFSA site. If you are wondering at this point what on earth has made me so bitter toward the Free Application for Federal Student Aid, then I must first take you back one year.

We thought it would be fine if my mom didn't have her taxes done, we would call the helpline when we needed to and everything would be fine.

Two weeks later and a godsend of a last-minute accountant meeting for those taxes to be done after all, my FAFSA forms were finally on their way through cyberspace to nameless people who would hold my future in their hands.

Melodramatic personal anecdotes aside, there are worse ways last year could have ended. My story is nothing in the shadow of some that have floated my way.

The horror stories run rampant, from the girl whose parents filed late and had to opt for a private loan company to the guy who had to move back home to attend community college.

Missed deadlines are of course the de facto cardinal sin of FAFSA (and column writing for that matter). The bottom line here is to get it in on time; the sooner you do, chances are greater you will receive more aid.

But sometimes life has a way of throwing curveballs. There is the story of Student A who had to take out ridiculously high interest private loans, the sort that will follow you to your grave.

Student loans are the one thing it is near impossible to file bankruptcy on. This one unlucky soul had to find out the hard way. Student A's parents filed her application late and there was hardly any aid left at that point.

Student B ran out of grants in his last semester and dropped out, just for one semester or two to earn some cash. Before he knew it he was earning minimum wage that had to go toward his living expenses, then the loan companies started dropping by for tea.

The lesson of the story is simple, getting to the end result, however, is not. I have since learned from my own horror story that consisted of those two weeks of after-school FAFSA hell.

I believe the problem to lay with high school seniors who are seasoned veterans of the college application by the time spring rolls around, and they think FAFSA will be a piece of cake after personal statements galore. But not so, naive soon to be freshman, it isn't your fault of course. This time one year ago someone not so unlike yourself was a little too optimistic about the FAFSA process, and now she is giving you a warning.

Missed deadlines are of course the de facto cardinal sin of FAFSA.

So how did I fare this year, you ask? One hour on President's Day. One hour was all it took to go from start to finish. Lesson learned. I suppose it really is true that some things can only be learned from experience. It was true in my case, but it doesn't have to be the same for you.

This year, my mom and I were prepared. Once all the W-2 forms are received, make that appointment to have your taxes done immediately — some accountants are already close to fully booked. Then, pin number and 1040, 1040A or 1040 EZ form in hand (I swear they used 'EZ' as some sort of joke).

Let's not forget the most rewarding part of the process. Besides the grants soon to be coming my way (fingers crossed), there are only 365 days until I have to look at the application again.

Now is the tedious wait for the financial award — praying, crossing your fingers and doing obscure good luck rituals that you're going to get something decent in return for the stress.

Are you scared yet? Well that's what FAFSA does, it scares you you-know-what-less. I can't help but envision faceless stiff-collared men in black suits sitting around in some secluded and dimly lit board room debating my financial award eligibility like it's a game of monopoly.

"What do you think Mr. Y?"

"Well Mr. Z, if only student X had filed one week earlier..."

Now that I've thoroughly demonized the hand that feeds me, I can say that I certainly do not have a grudge against FAFSA the organization. It's the confusion and fear that gets tacked onto the whole process, the process itself being the evil entity in question.

If I've somehow managed to instill a real FAFSA phobia in you, then you can always pay your tax person to do your FAFSA for you, but you wouldn't really want to entrust someone else with your future, would you?

Hannah Nelson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at hnelson@student.umass.edu.

POINT-COUNTER-POINT

"Freedom rings where opinions clash." - Adlai E. Stevenson

Campus violence: sporadic or status quo?

Walk freely, but tread softly

Devon Courtney

There really is no safer place to be than UMass Amherst. I really love the feeling I get that comes from me saying "Hello" to everyone I see on my way to class. I've never been shot, stabbed, or beaten up here, which is much more than I can say about the place where I'm from. In my four years here, I've come to understand that UMass is safer than a Tupperware party, and twice as fresh.

So why is it that ABC News, Dateline, and the Princeton Review all consider the prestigious University of Massachusetts at Amherst the Fallujah of colleges?

Now, it's true that sometimes things happen around campus. A former suitemate in McNamara returned to his suite and smacked his neighbor with a baseball bat. A UMass athlete was stabbed in the butt after a function at the Student Union. Who can forget the alleged "gay slur" beating that happened on Sunset Avenue last semester?

Even recently, the campus is abuzz with talk of the racially-motivated stabbing and then the more recent lacrosse beating, as it is now being popularly referred to. Finally, it's impossible not to understand why scores of riot police line up in Southwest after every sports game ever. You'd really have to be living under an enormous rock to have missed that.

The flat out truth is that about 99 percent of the UMass population is not in any way involved with violence on campus. Your personal odds for getting assaulted by a drunkard/stick-wielding lacrosse player/rioter with extreme sports prejudice/police officer confusing you with a roustabout are around one in 3,000. Those statistics were graciously tabulated by the imaginary statistician who lives in my brain. I had to employ his services because UMass officials seem really hesitant to release statistics about violence, for some odd reason.

When parents send their kids here for an education, they should be smart enough to understand that the tuition check is not a permission slip for four years of merciless beat downs. On top of that, most people aren't randomly assaulted; there's usually a deeper reason that better outlines the individual context of each violent crime.

A beautiful example of this would be after the Super Bowl, in which individuals who were happy about its outcome would parade around Southwest in Giants apparel, antagonizing the angry scores of Patriots fans. News flash: Doing something that dumb is equivalent to dropping blood in the water where sharks are swimming, or kicking a grizzly bear in the junk.

What I'm saying is that every student must take responsibility for his or her individual actions.

What I'm saying is that every student must take responsibility for his or her individual actions. Many of the recorded acts of violence that our school is scrutinized for could have been easily prevented, if a microcosm of critical thought had been introduced beforehand.

Of course, some of these violent acts are unprovoked and unexpected. This is an unfortunate reality that we humans have to deal with. When random violence does happen, all we can do is rely on the help of campus services and the support of our friends.

There are many violent occurrences here which go unreported, it is a certainty indeed. You might bear witness to party-themed violence, whether it takes the shape of an overenthusiastic partier smashing a bottle on someone or something, or maybe even the beginnings of a somber sexual assault, exacerbated by the consumption of alcohol.

Barring that, though, how much of this violent reputation really is just hype? UMass has had the popular moniker of "Zoomass" since the seventies. The paranoia and out of control rumors surrounding the reputation of the school could just be a game of telephone gone horribly haywire. With each sporadic crime in perfect proportion with our large population, the rumors of violent nature of UMass could Godzilla-stomp all over our city of idealistic academia.

I suppose that if UMass is a school where you are living in fear for your life, then you have bigger problems than either of us can put a finger on. If you really do believe that the dark and spooky path between Orchard Hill and Sylvan, reflexively called "Rape Road" and "The Rape Trail," is a place where foolhardy teenagers go for a hot and tasty rape sandwich, you might just be more impressionable than a toddler.

As long as you are taking precautions and making good decisions, your chances of falling victim to the overblown threat of UMass violence will be safely curtailed. This is a school, not a gladiatorial arena. We should be treating it as such, and if I find that you're not – I'll head butt you.

Just kidding. Gotcha.

Devon Courtney is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dcourtne@student.umass.edu.

Just stay inside

Nicholas O'Malley

You know those campus security e-mails you get about every month or so? It's about time you stopped deleting them and actually took a look at what they say. One quick glance at what's been going on at campus will show that, although your dorm might be a "pretty chill place," many places on campus aren't.

When I came to this school, I was well aware of its reputation for parties, riots, and everything in between, most of which I knew was unwarranted. All of these recent events, however, have taken a toll on what can be considered just an unfortunate aspect of college life instead of a point of concern.

I'm sorry, but I cannot declare a school safe as long as riots are accepted and anticipated every time there is a sports team in a championship game.

UMass has received a number of labels in the public eye: large, liberal, enormous, a party school and, in recent times, violent (did I mention it was big?). Most of the labels are warranted, but violent? If you take a minute to go over the events of the past few weeks, there's plenty of evidence there.

Most students don't even flinch when hearing about the arrests in Southwest.

Last semester, we were bombarded with e-mails about faux bombs, baseball bat beatings, stabbings, suspects on the lam; it comes to the point where it no longer fazes the student body.

It could be said that the amount of violence is a product of the school's size-proportions; however, that large amount of violence, the number of incidents, increases the chance that one will get pushed to the extreme, potentially endangering the lives of students.

For most students, nothing will happen; you'll spend your four years, (or more) here without incident. Maybe a scuffle here, an accident there – some cops that one time – but nothing really threatening.

The unfortunate few, on the other hand, have to take the burden of violence that is often overlooked as part of what goes down at this campus.

Most students don't even flinch when hearing about the arrests in Southwest; the police in riot gear and some stabbings here or there. It might even be a positive for some. If someone happens to get shanked on the morning of your 10 a.m. exam, you're getting some extra sleep instead.

Our campus has seen it all. We've had students, athletes, former students, outsiders all commit violence on campus. Honestly, who's left to stab us?

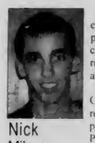
Chancellor Cole's recent e-mail detailed four individual occurrences on and close to campus over the course of three days, which include: assault by eight lacrosse players, sexual assault, assault, and three men injured, two of which were stabbed.

Despite all of this, the administration continues to preach about a "safe, free environment" and how "one act of violence is too much." And with each student that ignores the reposts of these events, they are getting away with it. If there is no student response to what occurs on campus, then there can be no expectations of our administration to do the same.

If it wasn't for this "education" thing we're all supposed be getting here (that, and someone insists on setting my dorm on fire), we'd all be better off in our dorms with the doors locked and windows boarded.

Even scarier than the events themselves is the fact that students are no longer concerned about such events (when stabbings are less concerning than the fact that it's chicken finger day at the DC, there's a problem). When you're tucked away in your nice, quiet dorm, away from the craziness of the towers and the incidents of Sylvan, it's easy to see the events as distant.

Such a lack of concern is hardly a concern when compared to the complacency of the rest of the student body. The events occur week after week, but there is no outcry, no demand for security; rather, there's an attitude towards less police presence on campus. This is a view stemmed from broken up parties, drug confiscation and suppressed riots.



Instead of attempting to work with our police force, our campus continues to fight against their presence. It has come to a point where getting wasted on a Friday night takes precedence over not getting attacked.

It has come to a point where the administration and police that we all despise so much lose their control; how can they address problems we don't care about when they are so many that we do.

These event are not sparked by outsiders, these crimes are committed by students towards students – and we allowed to continue because of the apathy of students.

Nick O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

Gov. Slots goes for broke

Nick Milano

This past week, advocates for Deval Patrick's proposal to build three casinos in Massachusetts received a major boost from an independent study.

The Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce report backed many of the projections made by the Patrick administration. While noting that construction jobs would dramatically fail to even venture close to Patrick's estimate, the report did affirm his annual revenue and jobs projections.

Despite this news, gaming opponents must continue to stand tall in preventing "Governor Slots," as Boston Globe columnist Steve Bailey has aptly nicknamed him, from welcoming casinos with open arms.

Even with the chamber's report, there are still many questions to be answered. The chamber did not assess potential lost revenues for regions in the state.

If Boston's Mayor Menino gets his casino in East Boston, will tourists forgo the wonderful collection of family-owned Italian eateries in the North End for the fare offered by casino conglomerates? What about other local businesses? Maybe if there were a casino in Boston, the gamblers will sacrifice some time to travel around the historic city, but would they also do so in Western and Southeastern Massachusetts?

Casinos, like the state lottery, thrive on finding new ways to trick people out of their money.

Surely, there will be more people visiting those areas, but are they doing so to experience small town Massachusetts, or to drink, dance and gamble? How can local businesses possibly expect a substantial and consistent boon to their coffers? Will golf excursions to Cape Cod turn into gambling escapades? What about the hotel business if casinos build their own? What kind of bearing will casino lobbyists have on legislators?

There have already been signs of meddling by casino lobbyists. The Boston Globe discovered that Speaker of the House Salvatore DiMasi, who has led the attack on Patrick's casino plan, played two rounds of golf with Joe O'Donnell, co-owner of Suffolk Downs.

Suffolk Downs, according to The Globe, is "aggressively pursuing a gaming license for their East Boston site," – thus, DiMasi's legislative independence should be called into question. Only after calls to DiMasi on the Globe's part did he offer to pay for the two rounds. At the same time, DiMasi triumphantly announced that he had declined an invitation to play with Donald Trump, another casino entrepreneur. While DiMasi has not changed his standing on casinos, he is one of the most recognizable faces in Massachusetts politics. How are less scrutinized members of the Massachusetts legislature being lobbied?

As previously mentioned in this space, casino lobbyists have dramatic control over the direction of laws that affect them. In California, Nevada and New Jersey, casinos were not forced to comply with indoor smoking bans. These state governments apparently put special interests above the public's ability to work and relax in smoke-free environments. But this shouldn't be a real surprise.

Governor Slots himself and the chamber's report have acknowledged that "gambling addictions, crime, and personal bankruptcy rates would almost certainly increase." But for him and other casino advocates, the millions in state revenue is worth the risk. Ask Governor Slots, and he will say he is doing his part by promising to divert 2.5 percent of state revenue for problem gamblers. In essence he's admitting that his plan will ruin people's lives, but claims he should be praised for dedicating money to create a "best in class" rehabilitation program.

With the national economy sliding into a recession, or already in one, Massachusetts is unlikely to escape the wrath of weak economic growth. Governor Slots responded DiMasi's attacks on his projection of 30,000 one-time construction jobs to build the casinos with a letter to the entire Legislature asking for "sound alternatives" from the Speaker. The way Governor Slots tells it, there is no way to generate economic growth and permanent jobs without the state opening its arms to an industry renowned for destroying lives.

But joining forces with casinos will in no way lead to a boost to the Massachusetts economy. Governor Slots is a brilliant man and his Ivy League education lends one to believe he would approach the slowing economy with more ideas than the simple easy way out, but thanks are in order for the legislators who are steadfast in their beliefs that Massachusetts does not need casinos to lead the 21 century.

While wasting time and goodwill in the legislature by pushing the casino issue, Governor Slots is letting his other legislation falter. He swept into office on a tidal wave of popular support, but his only accomplishment to date has been a defeat of a same-sex marriage ban.

Casinos, like the state lottery, thrive on finding new ways to trick people out of their money. They may be a quick way to raise funds, but they will not create a thriving economy. Employment will jump, revenue will jump, but casinos are not a growth industry – once jobs are filled, new ones will not be created.

Casinos are not and never will be a solution to a state's problems. Here's to hoping the legislature stands tall with DiMasi in bankrupting Governor Slots.

Nick Milano writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

Prioritize education

Dan Nicastro

The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees finance panel voted last week to increase student fees by 3.1 percent.

This means the projected student costs for the 2008-09 school year are $18,346 in state and a whopping $29,843 for out-of-state students. Sensing that these increases may be greeted with disapproval, a recent UMass press release laid out a three-tier justification of the increases.

First, the University contended that the rise in tuition and fees was below the rate of inflation. Second, it maintained that most of this money would return to the students through increases in financial aid awards, hiring of faculty and renovation projects.

Lastly, the Board of Trustees pointed out that the cost of a UMass education is much less than the cost of a private school education. These are all valid arguments, yet they obscure many other underlying facts about the nature of public education.

First, let's deal with the issue of inflation. The fee increase of 3.1 percent is certainly under the rate of inflation for the Northeast in the last quarter (which the Consumer Price Index lists as 3.6 percent), a feat the UMass system has managed to accomplish for the past five years.

Unfortunately, these numbers do not tell the whole story. While the University has managed to keep increases in fees under the curve of inflation, this may be because inflation is rising at a pace the University cannot keep up with.

As unemployment increases (4.8 percent in February), and the economy slows, we may be headed for more than a recession. If these numbers remain consistent over a long period of time, we may see the reappearance of stagflation.

Inflation will skyrocket and families will not be able to afford to send their children to college. Even with additional financial aid packages, these increases may be enough to keep deserving prospective students away from quality secondary education.

This leads to the second problem. The University has pledged to channel 20 percent of revenue from these fee increases into more financial awards for students. Increasing the paltry number of financial aid awards is certainly an idea long overdue.

Increasing the paltry number of financial aid awards is certainly an idea long overdue.

The problem is that the increases in awards do not amount to much, especially since college loan companies are suffering due to fallout in subprime loans and the credit crunch.

The Massachusetts Educational Financing Authority has allowed thousands of students (including myself) to take out loans in order to pursue a college degree. Due to worry among investors, however, MEFA has so far been unable to secure financing for the loans it doles out.

Like it or not, loans are a vital part of modern collegiate life. With costs through the roof, it is difficult to pay upwards of $17,000 out of pocket. This means students need some sort of financial help to pay their way through college. If the means of securing these financial investments dries up, then increased financial aid awards will be too little too late.

As a final argument, the Board of Trustees repeatedly reiterated the fact that a public university education at the University of Massachusetts is cheaper than the average Massachusetts private school education. It's hard to argue against this point. Even with fee increases, the average private secondary education in Massachusetts is over $22,000 more expensive than that of UMass Amherst.

Comparing the two, however, is like comparing apples with a Rolls Royce. Of course private schools cost more. The "private" moniker denotes independence from the state in terms of curricula, teaching methods and, most importantly, funding.

The goal of a public university, on the other hand, is to "provide an affordable and accessible education of high quality," as laid forth in the UMass mission statement.

It's clear the problem does not lie solely with the UMass Board of Trustees. While fees have increased over the past several years, these increases probably have more to do with economic realities than attempts to cheat students.

Instead, the problem is indicative of the way in which we treat education in this country. On the one hand, we celebrate the abstract concept of public education, believing it to be a good measure of the success of a democratic society.

On the other hand, governmental programs and entities fail to reflect this mythical view of public education (especially at the collegiate level). They treat the system more like a business meant to secure higher profit margins by letting students and parents foot the bill for their schooling.

While the Patrick administration is certainly doing more to aid the UMass system, it's not enough. I realize it's naively foolish to believe government will eventually foot the bill for higher education, but there are steps that can be taken to alleviate the pressures on families and students who want the education they are entitled to have.

Many of us who graduate tend never to look back at the system we've left. Instead of thinking of education in terms of its public benefits, or as a vital societal need, we see our tax dollars "wasted" on a system that provides no immediate benefit to us. That's an attitude we need to shift if we ever want to see further progress within our democratic nation.

Dan Nicastro is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dnicastro

Fed/Up?
Ed/Op.
editorial@dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

SUMMER 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Paramore prevails at annual spring concert

BY HEATHER WAXMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

(Editor's note: This story was originally published on May 5.)

Ah, Spring. With it comes nature's fresh blossoms, the occasional rainstorm and of course the University of Massachusetts' annual Spring Concert.

Upon entering the Mullins Center last night, it was impossible to ignore the eruption of deafening screams of intoxication echoing from all angles.

The evening kicked off with two mini sets performed by the winners of this year's Battle of the Bands, Static & Messiah, as well as the runners-up, Exit Reason.

Static & Messiah, a Boston-based hip-hop, rap duo, took the stage with a heap of energy and did a sufficient job piling up the crowd for their measly 15-minute set.

After taking the stage, Exit Reason was full of grins and gratification.

"It was awesome - an unreal experience," said 19-year-old lead guitarist/vocalist Sam Wood. "We have no complaints. It was a dream come true to be here."

Certainly impressive considering three of the four band members are still in high school. Sean Nolan, bassist/background vocalist is a freshman at UMass while Wood, drummer Tony Interlande, and rhythm guitarist/vocalist Jarad Weeks were new to stepping foot onto a college campus.

Then came a very loud, pulsating bass shaking the ground beneath, Fat Joe took the stage for what turned out to be a seemingly endless and virtually pointless half-hour of noise.

He opened with an original number followed by a rendition of Akon's hit "We Takin' Over." The crowd was fairly amused and perked up a bit when "Lean Back" came on.

It was almost impossible to pay attention to the premise of any of his songs between the myriad of f-bombs and n-bombs being dropped like … well … bombs.

Following Fat Joe's less-than-pleasing performance was yet another sore disappointment.

Envision a cross between a wannabe Neyo and Omarion and you get Trey Songz, an R&B, hip-hop singer, from Petersburg, Va.

Much like his predecessor, his set consisted of a lot of back-tracks and crotch-holding. He could hardly be heard due to the roaring screams coming from behind as his DJ shouted a useless blend of "uh" and "what."

By the third track, entitled "Last Time," the audience had begun to drift off into a stupor. The inevitable and tacky ripping of his shirt kept the crowd amused for a short while, as his pants made their way down to his rear end, a clear shot of his "package" in tow.

All hope seemed to be lost until a tiny ball of fire burst onto the stage.

Haley Williams, 19-year-old lead vocalist of Paramore, exploded onstage with her impressive vocals and animated stage presence. She flailed around every which way, keeping the audience engaged with her every move in between backflips by bassist, Jeremy Davis.

"I like you guys," she said with a smirk, "welcome to the family."

The Franklin, Tenn., natives were well-received as the crowd bopped along to the bands' catchy pop hits including their latest single, "crush-crushcrush," and the obvious crowd-favorite, "Misery Business."

After a perpetual half-hour following the culmination of Paramore's set, the crowd was anxiously squirming in its seats before the lights dimmed and Jimmy Eat World took the stage.

The band opened rather weak, with "Big Casino." A few loyal fans waved their hands frantically while the remainder of the crowd proved to be slightly underwhelmed.

"Sweetness," a ditty off their 2001 album "Bleed American," yielded a different reaction. Nearly everyone leapt to their feet, echoing "whoa" after "whoa."

Their stage presence lacked in comparison to Paramore's as lead singer/guitarist Jim Adkins failed to leave his five-foot radius and each song weaved through one after another.

Last night marked the band's last show with Paramore; Jimmy Eat World I soon to embark on a small cross-country tour in both Sweden and Norway, wrapping it up in mid-June.

By far, Paramore stole the night. Without its solid set, the show would have been a sure disappointment.

Better luck next year.

Heather Waxman can be reached at hwaxman@student.umass.edu.

Idol performs at Mullins

BY MEGHAN MURPHY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

(Editor's note: This story was originally published on Feb. 2.)

Former "American Idol" winner Carrie Underwood performed at the Mullins Center last night as part of her first headlining tour. She focused on most of the songs from her newest album, "Carnival Ride," along with some older fan favorites from 2005's "Some Hearts."

The three years since her "American Idol" win have transformed the Oklahoma native into a completely different performer. Her stage presence has evolved, focusing more on pumping up the crowd than on showcasing her vocal talents.

Underwood started off shakily with the first track off her new CD, "Flat on the Floor." She rose out of the stage from underneath, which made for an exciting entrance, but the vocals through her first few songs were mediocre as she began her set.

Following the first five songs, she changed into a floor-length blue dress and transitioned into Grammy award-winning song "Jesus Take the Wheel." The song was one of her earliest singles and the first of the night from her first album. The crowd instantly recognized the song, and Underwood let them sing the first chorus on their own.

The crowd's reaction to the song gave her an obvious confidence boost and energy for the middle of her performance. She followed "Jesus Take the Wheel" with powerful ballad "I Know You Won't."

This song and the ones that followed finally showcased Underwood's true vocal abilities, creating a different stage presence than earlier in the show. She shifted to a series of more upbeat songs with "I Ain't In Checotah Anymore" and "Crazy Dreams."

Towards the end of the show, Underwood seemed to lose momentum a bit. "All-American Girl" was well-received, but she seemed to have lost some of her energy by the time she got to "So Small," one of her newer songs.

Underwood's encore started with a ballad and moved on to an unlikely choice, a Guns 'N Roses cover. As more of a ballad performer, '80s metal is not where her strengths lie. It wasn't her best song vocally, but gave her band a chance to have fun and do something different onstage. She ended her set with her latest and most successful hit, "Before He Cheats." This was a definite crowd favorite.

Although Underwood's catchier songs carry her albums, her ballads were where her voice really shone in a live performance. She seemed most comfortable with the slower songs, during which she gave herself a chance to belt out the strong notes and showcase her talent.

Josh Turner opened for Underwood with a simple set that featured his deep, crooning voice. "Would You Go With Me" from his 2006 album "Your Man" was especially popular with the female portion of the Mullins Center crowd.

Meghan Murphy can be reached at mmurphy@dailycollegian.com.

Extravaganja trips in Amherst

Celebration keeps the 4/20 spirit alive

BY STEPHANIE MCPHERSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

(Editor's note: This story was originally published on April 22.)

A slightly sweet, earthy smell could be detected throughout Amherst this weekend, as the community came together for the 17th annual Extravaganja and the second annual Spring Concert on the Hill. With clear blue skies and the sun finally shining warm, it was a perfect weekend for a celebration.

On Saturday, the University of Massachusetts' Cannabis Reform Coalition (CRC) sponsored Extravaganja, an event supporting the freedom of marijuana. Paying homage to the hippie culture, Extravaganja saw reggae, rap and rock bands setting the mood. Booths were lining the perimeter of the Amherst Common, selling handmade clothes, tie dye T-shirts and an array of blown-glass pieces.

These booths, however, are not what make Extravaganja a unique event. It's the people. Looking around the lawn, one could see individuals of every age and every style, those who were there in support of the issue, and those who were just along for the ride.

Howard Hanna, 31, has lived in Amherst just under a year. He was just planning on grabbing some food downtown when the stream of people heading toward the Common pulled him in. Though he wasn't sure at first, he quickly "got a feel for what [the festival] is endorsing," he said.

"I'm just looking around, taking it in," he continued. "It's a great community event."

While there were definitely a fair share of people like Hanna, the majority of the people attending Extravaganja seemed to be more than familiar with the issues.

Attendees donned whatever marijuana-related clothing they had, from one girl who wore a white pull over decorated with pink leaves, to one man who wore shorts, a backwards hat with a leaf decal and a cape.

Some people opted for no clothes at all. An older man with a long gray beard walked confidently around the festival with nothing on but brown rags and huge green pack on his back. Another girl, grooving to the live music provided by a string of bands booked by the CRC wore nothing on her chest but painted leaves.

Between the bands, speakers would talk about the issue of legalizing marijuana. One impassioned man urged people to vote, discussing the referendum that will be on the November ballot that will decriminalize marijuana.

"If the two parties don't appeal to you, there's always a third party," he yelled to the crowd.

Greg Depot and Art Laramee, both residents of the area, are familiar with Extravaganja, having come to the festival a few times before. When asked if they supported the cause, both men answered with a strong "yes."

"It's probably the least of all evils," said Laramee, continuing to say that it's no worse than drinking.

The culture and atmosphere of Extravaganja would have been right at home in the '60s. People with long, braided hair were dancing without a care in front of the stage, people were getting their faces painted and body painted dancers were hula-hooping around. Bob Marley would have been proud.

The next day, on 4/20 itself, the Central Area Government (CAG) put on their Concert on the Hill. Starting at noon and running until dusk, local bands played as Frisbees and footballs flew through the air. Student-run businesses on campus set up booths selling burgers and drinks. The CAG offered free waters and munchies.

The hill was a sea of different faces, peaking at close to 1,000 people. The event was a culmination of a lot of hard work by the CAG. According to junior Mike Megaro, the governor of CAG, they started planning last semester, after the similar fall concert Rocktoberfest.

A lot of the publicity was done via Facebook, which proved to be more than effective.

"It's awesome … we're expecting over a thousand," said Bilal Janjua, the lieutenant governor of CAG, early in the day.

CAG was able to provide food for this huge number by striking a deal with the Blue Wall. Audio Promedia provided the sound equipment and the UMass Arts Council gave the CAG a grant, both of which made the whole concert possible.

There were seven bands playing over the course of the day, all with very different sounds. There were funk/jazz trios, '90s powerpop bands, among others. On the Rocks got the crowd on its feet with covers like "Love Shack."

At 4:15 p.m. the crowd stood like a wave and started to boo the cop car that had appeared at the top of the hill. According to eyewitnesses, a police officer searched someone's bags and then took the culprit in the car.

Less than five minutes later, the party mood returned, as the Boston-based jam band State Your Mind took the stage. Exactly at 4:20 p.m., cheers echoed around the hill and the band started to play. Throughout their performance, the members of State Your Mind would wish the hill a happy 4/20.

The community spirit was prevalent on the hill. People were grilling their own burgers and playing catch, just hanging out and having a good time.

Johanna Mayorga, a UMass sophomore, was enjoying herself, despite expressing the sentiment that the concert was a little hyped up.

"I've been having a good time - very chill. I missed [relaxing]," she said.

Senior Thomas "Stubbins" Hill agreed. Though he wasn't partaking in most of the festivities of the day, he was still enjoying the music and the sun, and, as he said, "I caught myself tapping my toes a little bit to State Your Mind."

The weekend seemed to be a success for both the CRC and CAG. It brought together a community on a beautiful spring weekend for a cause that resonates with a lot of UMass students and Amherst community members.

Stephanie McPherson can be reached at smcphers@dailycollegian.com.

People of all ages came to the Amherst Common in celebration of the 17th annual Extravaganja festival for good music and relaxation on April 19.

Indie-rock band polices Pearl Street

BY BRIAN WOOD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

(Editor's note: This story was originally published on April 29.)

With a backdrop of sirens and the unified chanting of their name, Tokyo Police Club emerged onto a tranquil, illuminated stage amidst a hue of blue light and much fanfare. What followed was far from a peaceful Saturday night.

Translating their frenzied material seamlessly in the live setting, the band powered through the lengths of almost their entire discography before a capacity crowd at the Pearl Street Night Club. Four-piece bands generally don't create the kind of energy and depth of sound that the Canadian quartet mustered, and for that the band deserves their due. Whether rattling tambourines, emphatically clapping, or incorporating crowd interaction, the band not only stretched the limitations of what a relatively simple four-piece arrangement can offer in a live environment, they abandoned them altogether.

The frantic pace of their recorded works took on new life on stage, aided by the band's theatrical flair, engaging material, and the elaborate circle of fluorescent punctuations that accompanied every second of their set. Surrounded by synchronized glowing pillars, every break down was met with an elaborate array of colors, and every lull was met with soothing and still light. This added visual provided a unique dimension to their stage performance, accentuating the insatiable highs and melodic lows of their set list.

Bassist and lead vocalist Dave Monks was front and center and proved to be a stabilizing force to the band's eccentric on-stage persona. His bass lines carried the majority of the night's selections and were accented by Graham Wright's over-the-top keyboard arrangements and the spirited drumming of Greg Alsop.

Guitarist Josh Hook served in a variety of roles, playing his guitar positioned well below his midsection and periodically letting it hang from its strap in favor of inspiring clap-alongs and feverishly providing a supplemental layer of tambourine.

Wright was the true showman of the quartet, owning his corner of the stage with an unparallel flair for the dramatic. The audience could

See TOKYO POLICE on page 7

Indie-rock band, Tokyo Police Club, entertained the Pearl Street Night Club on April 26.

Tokyo Police Club plays NoHo

TOKYO POLICE from page 6

see the sweat drip from Wright's hair and collect on the lenses of his black-rimmed glasses and the exhausted expression on his face as he screamed into the microphone, lunging over his synthesizer, desperate to reach the audience.

When he wasn't playing or grinding his hips into the casing of his keyboard, he was violently rattling and slamming a tambourine, using his free hand to punctuate the fourth beats so hard your palms felt sore even from the back of the clubroom.

On this night, one of the biggest criticisms of the band's records turned out to be one of their live shows greatest strengths. With a discography that runs under an hour in length, the band provided a taste of everything, both old and new, and delivered their quick hitting songs with all the necessary dynamism.

Despite their newest album "Elephant Shell" being released just this past Tuesday on Saddle Creek Record, the crowd was familiar with the wide range of the new material performed by the band. Slower selections such as "Juno" and opener "Listen to the Math" resonated through the clubroom and were met with softly mouthed audience renditions to accompany the relatively calm lightshow.

Upbeat songs like the cheekily titled "Your English is Good" and the clap-along single "Tessellate" caused quite a stir in the crowd, as dancing broke out in patches throughout the packed room while those on the outskirts were likewise helpless to stand motionless.

As is always the case, the band's older material garnered the most positive response from the crowd. Tearing through tracks from "A Lesson in Crime," the bands 2006 release, the band managed to supplement their newest material with their established works, maintaining a delicate balance throughout the length of the set.

"Nature of the Experiment" elicited the warmest response of the night. The frantically paced number got people moving in unison with the song's aggressive pace and singing out with a complete lack of restraint in unison with Monks' vocals, which arguably sounded superior in the flesh then they did on the songs digital counterpart.

The band fittingly concluded the night with "Cheer it On," a song that served as the introduction to their first album and the band as a whole. As band and crowd yelled in unison along with the song's chorus "When you're standing near Tokyo Police Club/ when you're standing next to me/ Tokyo Police Club," the lyrics developed new meaning. With each emphatic declaration of their namesake it became increasingly obvious that the song was no longer an introduction; rather, it was a statement that they had truly arrived.

Brian Wood can be reached at bjwood@student.umass.edu

Let the zombie games begin

Humans vs. Zombies invades UMass campus

BY STEPHANIE MCPHERSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

(Editor's note: This story originally ran on October 31, 2007.)

Close your curtains. Lock your doors. And whatever you do, do not go outside without your socks. Because starting at midnight on Halloween, many University of Massachusetts students' worst fear will be realized: zombies will invade.

Obviously, people aren't really becoming the undead, but the excitement and preparations surrounding the event Humans vs. Zombies (HvZ) sure feels like it. People can now execute those long-gestating plans of anti-zombie combat.

"A lot of people think about that sort of thing, I've noticed, and most people I talk to are more than ready to discuss escape routes and their weapon of choice against the undead masses," said Dante Ciliberti, one of the co-organizers of UMass's Capture the Flag Registered Student Organization that is hosting the game.

Because that's what "Humans vs Zombies" is - a huge, intricately-organized, campus-wide game of tag. But the premise is more interesting than a simple "Tag, you're it," and participants have many more defenses than simply touching the ground and naming a TV show.

Humans vs. Zombies was created in 2005 by two students at Goucher College in Baltimore, Md. Brad Scappington and Chris Weed had no idea the game designed for their small college would become so popular, on and off the Goucher campus.

"It's turned into a huge phenomenon," said Weed in a documentary on Goucher's fourth HvZ game.

Since its conception, Humans vs. Zombies has invaded campuses country-wide, from the University of Pittsburgh to Cornell, and from Tennessee Technological University to UMass, according to the Humans vs. Zombies UMass Wikipedia page.

The game is in its second attempt at UMass. With plans falling through last year, HvZ has strong leaders this fall in the co-founders of the Capture the Flag RSO, Ciliberti and Devin Ashe, both UMass seniors.

The duo based the rules for the UMass game off of the original guidelines laid down by the Goucher founders. First of all, to play, students have to be registered by the start of the game at midnight on Halloween. They can do so by clicking the link provided by the HvZ Facebook group. Interested students can register right up until the game begins.

The game starts with one or very few zombies - those who are doomed from the get-go. When HvZ 2007 officially begins, the original undead will be notified via e-mail, and the zombie feast will commence. The long-term goal is survival. Humans have to outlive the zombies, and zombies have to continue snacking on humans until all players are walking corpses.

No real cannibalism will occur, of course. Zombies, who are identified by a bandana on their heads, must tag the humans, who wear their bandanas on their arms. Once a human is tagged and converted into a zombie, they have to join their new teammates in sporting the bandana on their heads. They must also turn in the ID badge they are given at the beginning of the game, so their attacker can upload their information to the game's Web site. This ensures that all players know who the enemy is.

The humans are not completely helpless in their fight for life. There are certain munitions the humans can employ to "stun" a zombie for 15 minutes, rendering their "biting" abilities useless for that time. No human should be caught dead without a balled up sock or some marshmallows to hurl at approaching zombies. If a zombie doesn't "eat" or tag a human in 48 hours, that zombie "dies" and is out of the game. A team wins either when all humans have been converted, or when all zombies have died of starvation.

Humans vs. Zombies is no short game of tag. It can last from a few days up to a few weeks. So as not to interrupt classes, there are a number of designated safe zones. These include, but are not limited to, academic buildings, the W.E.B. DuBois Library, inside PVTA buses, sports practices and "places of work (as long as the player is on the clock)," according to UMass Wiki.

In order to succeed in Humans vs. Zombies, players will have to band together.

"Most people who try to go solo end up becoming part of the zombie horde," said Ciliberti. He is hoping HvZ will prove to be a team-building experience, as well as a zombie movie come to life.

The game is in its second attempt at UMass. With plans falling through last year, HvZ has strong leaders this fall in the co-founders of the Capture the Flag RSO, Ciliberti and Devin Ashe, both UMass seniors.

Humans vs. Zombies explodes onto the UMass campus at midnight on Halloween.

"I'm guessing that HvZ will bring a lot of friends together at UMass, just like it has at other schools," Ciliberti said.

Alex Silber, a sophomore at UMass, is excited to battle the zombies. "What I like about the game [is] the fact that we work together to destroy evil," he said.

The Humans vs. Zombies forum, which can also be accessed through Facebook, echoes the excitement of Silber. The posts are filled with confidant claims of being able to hold off the zombies, should one find oneself the last human alive. The forum also has sections to discuss strategy, but beware - just because zombies are undead, it doesn't mean they can't read.

So when the clock strikes midnight on All Hallows Eve, tie your bandanas, grab your marshmallows, and get ready for an epic fight for survival and dominance between humans and zombies.

Stephanie McPherson can be reached at smcphers@dailycollegian.com.

Walking with the dinosaurs

BY RYAN MCASKILL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

(Editor's note: This story was originally published on March 3.)

Over the last few days, the Mullins Center has been the home of a show that can only be described as big.

"Walking with Dinosaurs: The Live Experience," took over the University of Massachusetts arena last Thursday and stayed for seven shows through yesterday. Opening night drew a respectable crowd, and size only grew as word of mouth spread.

The Mullins Center went through a dramatic transformation for the show. The floor, which has been covered with grayish-black flooring and has a similarly-colored hill in the center, is about the same size as the ice when the boards are in place for hockey games. The first three rows up from the floor are blocked off to prevent any arrant tails from hitting spectators.

The far end of the arena is also blocked off and has become the entrance for the large stars.

The show begins with an announcement that flash photography is not allowed because it may startle the normally easy going beasts, leading to unwelcome results. Additionally, cell phones are to be turned off, which shouldn't matter because cell reception will not be available for another 65 million years anyway.

Following the announcements came the introduction of the tour guide for the evening - and the only human character in the show -paleontologist Huxley, currently played by Jonathan Bliss and James Roberts.

Huxley explains fossils and how we have knowledge about dinosaurs and their time period. He also talks about Pangaea, the one, giant continent represented by the hill in the center of the floor.

A pile of eggs appear from a corner of the hill and begin to hatch. As Huxley talks about them, the first of the life-size dinosaurs appears in a Lilienstemus. One of the smaller units in the show, the Lilienstemus is also the first of the individually-manned puppet units in the production.

Following the Lilienstemus is a life-size Plateosaurus, which stands 10 ft. tall and 31 ft. long.

From there, the show progresses quickly through the 40-minute first act before intermission arrives.

The second act is the more impressive of the two and features many well-known and fan-favorite dinosaurs.

"Walking with Dinosaurs: The Live Experience" transformed the Mullins Center for seven showings, each drawing a respectable audience.

It opens with Huxley telling us we have jumped 30-million years in "what seemed like only a 20-minute intermission."

The floor, now covered with smoke, is fairly open as the Pangaea hill has now broken up and moved outwards to the corners. Dropping from the rafters in front of the giant screen is an Ornithocheirus, or Pterodactyl.

The second act continues to roll on as Raptors and the always-popular Tyrannosaurus Rex, both baby and mama, make appearances.

The introduction of the T-Rex is a particularly amusing moment, which everyone in the audience will enjoy. When mama T-Rex enters, her roar literally shakes the Mullins Center.

The second act, also 40-minutes, wraps up with a dramatic light show as the meteor strikes the Earth, thus ending the existence of the dinosaurs.

The true stars of the show are, not surprisingly, the animatronic and puppet dinosaurs. From the moment they walk out, you forget that they are simply large robots or people in suits. Every detail is captured, and the dinosaurs appear so life-like that you want out reach out and pet one.

The overall production is on the same scale as a Disney World attraction, minus Mickey Mouse. Everything is over the top, but not so much that it becomes distracting. There is a good mix of humor, action, information and "awww" moments that gave everyone something positive to take away.

While it helps to be a fan of dinosaurs or robots, you don't need to be either to enjoy the show. With an audience that ranges from eight to 90-years-old, there is something for everyone.

To truly appreciate the life-size animatronics, they need to be seen in person. Video and pictures don't do the wireless robots justice.

The show is completely unique and creates an atmosphere that brings out the inner-child in everyone. As Huxley put it, "life on Earth will never again be this big."

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskill@dailycollegian.com

Lou Reed channels inner poet

BY S.P. SULLIVAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

(Editor's note: This story was originally published on April 23.)

Thurston Moore, the Sonic Youth frontman who opened for Lou Reed at The Calvin Theater on April 20, met mixed reactions from the standing-room-only crowd. Not everyone in attendance appreciated the experimental, sometimes dissonant sound produced by Moore and his fellow musicians.

The uninitiated might've also mistaken the chanted "Lou's" for boos, but as soon as Reed took the stage Sunday, the crowd was his.

Without any introductory remarks, the former Velvet Underground frontman got the night started with "Mad," from "Ecstasy," his 2000 concept album about his experience with relationships. Reed's thrusty, conversationalist singing voice hasn't been curbed by age. Reed, aged 66, was dressed casual-cool in jeans, sneakers and a sleeveless black T-shirt, curly dark hair just barely going gray.

And while his eclectic body of work has incorporated a lot of sound switching, the night's performance was very blues-based, guitar-driven rock.

He followed "Mad" with a rendition of the Velvet Underground classic "Sweet Jane" from the 1970 album "Loaded." During the intro, Reed left his post at the microphone to address the crowd, still chanting their "Lou's" before breaking into the opening lyric. "Standing on the corner / suitcase in my hand."

"Sweet Jane" was coupled with another Underground classic, "I'm Set Free," complimented with accordion by his keyboard player, musician Kevin Hearn of Barenaked Ladies fame.

Reed returned to his more recent work with an equally accordion-infused version of "Ecstasy" from the eponymous album, the guitars jangling and his drummer, Tony "Thunder" Smith switching between his drum set and a pair of bongos.

Mid song, Reed let his guitar hang as he recited, gesticulating more like a performance poet than a rock star, "I see a child through a window with a bib / And I think of us and what we almost did / The Hudson rocketing with light / The ships pass the Statue of Liberty at night."

Returning his hands to show off his chops, Reed let the notes of his guitar solo hang before allowing Smith, a world-renowned drummer and producer, to follow with an impressive solo of his own, punctuating each symbol crash with a pump of his fist.

By the time he got comfortable, Reed lost his too-cool-for-small talk demeanor and began to speak to the crowd. Putting down his guitar and addressing the audience, Reed asked his lead guitarist, Steve Hunter, "This is the one out of that movie, right?"

Hunter answered, "Yes, this is the one out of that movie."

The crowd cheered and Reed let out a "Yay for Juno" and a crack about foreign movies outsourcing American jobs before breaking into the Velvet Underground's "I'm Sticking With You," featured recently on the "Juno" soundtrack, with vocal accompaniment from drummer Smith.

Accompanied by organ, Reed announced, "So this is a poem by Edgar Allen Poe," before delving into a piece from "The Raven," Reed's 2003 musical treatment of the works of the famed poet.

After the song, Reed reflected on the piece to the audience. "The irresistible impulse to do that which you know is wrong for you," he recited. He smiled, cocked his head. "What an idea that is - wish somebody would've told me that a while ago."

Reed introduced his "Halloween Parade" quite unsentimentally, with some background: "Around Halloween, there's this parade in New York. This is a song about so many people who died of AIDS, so there's not as many people in the Halloween parade."

Reed closed his set with "Guardian Angel," also off his Poe tribute "The Raven," but the crowd wasn't having it.

Clapping hands and stomping feet after the final bows, the attendees coaxed Reed into what he was probably planning all along: an encore.

Reed and bandmates retook the stage for "Pale Blue Eyes," from the Underground's 1969 eponymous album, leaving the audience once again begging for more.

It was a conservative show for Reed, who has a penchant for the avant-garde, but stuck, mostly, to familiar tunes from his recent albums and Velvet Underground cache. Knowing Reed, though, who has made a career out of reinvention, it's just a temporary thing.

S.P. Sullivan can be reached at spsullivan@dailycollegian.com.

18 Plus College Night
SKYPLEX
Thursdays
The #1 Place to Party!
3 Different Rooms/3 DJ's spinning the best
In Top 40 Dance House and Select Mashup
THE ULTIMATE HOT BODY CONTEST
$100 Best Male $100 Best Female
The Hottest 18 Plus
SATURDAY NIGHT
Dance Party
NOW HIRING!
Bartenders
Cashiers
Security Staff
Barback
Waitstaff
SATURDAY
SKYPLEX
SkyPlex 10 Stearns Sq. Dartmouth (Prospect) 413.827.9000 www.SkyPlex.us

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL -W.SPFLD
Special Student Rate
Local-National Placement
Includes Certification
1-800-357-3210
BostonBartender.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

SUMMER 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Paramore prevails at annual spring concert

By Heather Waxman
Collegian Staff

(Editor's note: This story was originally published on May 5.)

Ah, Spring. With it comes nature's fresh blossoms, the occasional rainstorm and of course the University of Massachusetts' annual Spring Concert.

Upon entering the Mullins Center last night, it was impossible to ignore the eruption of deafening screams of intoxication echoing from all angles.

The evening kicked off with two mini sets performed by the winners of this year's Battle of the Bands, Static & Messiah, as well as the runners-up, Exit Reason.

Static & Messiah, a Boston-based hip-hop, rap duo, took the stage with a heap of energy and did a sufficient job filling up the crowd for their measly 15-minute set.

After taking the stage, Exit Reason was full of grins and gratification.

"It was awesome - an unreal experience," said 19-year-old lead guitarist/vocalist Sam Wood. "We have no complaints. It was a dream come true to be here."

Certainly impressive considering three of the four band members are still in high school. Sean Nolan, bassist/background vocalist is a freshman at UMass while Wood, drummer Tony Interlande, and rhythm guitarist/vocalist Jarad Weeks were new to stepping foot onto a college campus.

Then came a very loud, pulsating bass shaking the ground beneath, Fat Joe took the stage for what turned out to be a seemingly endless and virtually pointless half-hour of noise.

He opened with an original number followed by a rendition of Akon's hit "We Takin' Over." The crowd was fairly amused and perked up a bit when "Lean Back" came on.

It was almost impossible to pay attention to the premise of any of his songs between the myriad of f-bombs and n-bombs being dropped like ... well ... bombs.

Following Fat Joe's less-than-pleasing performance was yet another sore disappointment.

Envision a cross between a wannabe Neyo and Omarion and you get Trey Songz, an R&B, hip-hop singer, from Petersburg, Va.

Much like his predecessor, his set consisted of a lot of back-tracks and crotch-holding. He could hardly be heard due to the roaring screams coming from behind as his DJ shouted a useless blend of "uh" and "what."

By the third track, entitled "Last Time," the audience had begun to drift off into a stupor. The inevitable and tacky ripping of his shirt kept the crowd amused for a short while, as his pants made their way down to his rear end, a clear shot of his "package" in tow.

All hope seemed to be lost until a tiny ball of fire burst onto the stage.

Haley Williams, 19-year-old lead vocalist of Paramore, exploded onstage with her impressive vocals and animated stage presence. She flailed around every which way, keeping the audience engaged with her every move in between backflips by bassist, Jeremy Davis.

"I like you guys," she said with a smirk, "welcome to the family."

The Franklin, Tenn., natives were well-received as the crowd bopped along to the bands' catchy pop hits including their latest single, "crush-crushcrush," and the obvious crowd-favorite, "Misery Business."

After a perpetual half-hour following the culmination of Paramore's set, the crowd was anxiously squirming in its seats before the lights dimmed and Jimmy Eat World took the stage.

The band opened rather weak, with "Big Casino." A few loyal fans waved their hands frantically while the remainder of the crowd proved to be slightly underwhelmed.

"Sweetness," a ditty off their 2001 album "Bleed American," yielded a different reaction. Nearly everyone leapt to their feet, echoing "whoa" after "whoa."

Their stage presence lacked in comparison to Paramore's as lead singer/guitarist Jim Adkins failed to leave his five-foot radius and each song weaved through one after another.

Last night marked the band's last show with Paramore; Jimmy Eat World 1 soon to embark on a small cross-country tour in both Sweden and Norway, wrapping it up in mid-June.

By far, Paramore stole the night. Without its solid set, the show would have been a sure disappointment.

Better luck next year.

Heather Waxman can be reached at hwaxman@student.umass.edu.

Idol performs at Mullins

By Meghan Murphy
Collegian Staff

(Editor's note: This story was originally published on Feb. 2.)

Former "American Idol" winner Carrie Underwood performed at the Mullins Center last night as part of her first headlining tour. She focused on most of the songs from her newest album, "Carnival Ride," along with some older fan favorites from 2005's "Some Hearts."

The three years since her "American Idol" win have transformed the Oklahoma native into a completely different performer. Her stage presence has evolved, focusing more on pumping up the crowd than on showcasing her vocal talents.

Underwood started off shakily with the first track off her new CD, "Flat on the Floor." She rose out of the stage from underneath, which made for an exciting entrance, but the vocals through her first few songs were mediocre as she began her set.

Following the first five songs, she changed into a floor-length blue dress and transitioned into Grammy award-winning song "Jesus Take the Wheel." The song was one of her earliest singles and the first of the night from her first album. The crowd instantly recognized the song, and Underwood let them sing the first chorus on their own.

The crowd's reaction to the song gave her an obvious confidence boost and energy for the middle of her performance. She followed "Jesus Take the Wheel" with powerful ballad "I Know You Won't."

This song and the ones that followed finally showcased Underwood's true vocal abilities, creating a different stage presence than earlier in the show. She shifted to a series of more upbeat songs with "I Ain't In Checotah Anymore" and "Crazy Dreams."

Towards the end of the show, Underwood seemed to lose momentum a bit. "All-American Girl" was well-received, but she seemed to have lost some of her energy by the time she got to "So Small," one of her newer songs.

Underwood's encore started with a ballad and moved on to an unlikely choice, a Guns 'N Roses cover. As more of a ballad performer, '80s metal is not where her strengths lie. It wasn't her best song vocally, but gave her band a chance to have fun and do something different onstage. She ended her set with her latest and most successful hit, "Before He Cheats." This was a definite crowd favorite.

Although Underwood's catchier songs carry her albums, her ballads were where her voice really shone in a live performance. She seemed most comfortable with the slower songs, during which she gave herself a chance to belt out the strong notes and showcase her talent.

Josh Turner opened for Underwood with a simple set that featured his deep, crooning voice. "Would You Go With Me" from his 2006 album "Your Man" was especially popular with the female portion of the Mullins Center crowd.

Meghan Murphy can be reached at mmurphy@dailycollegian.com.

Extravaganja trips in Amherst

Celebration keeps the 4/20 spirit alive

By Stephanie McPherson
Collegian Staff

(Editor's note: This story was originally published on April 22.)

A slightly sweet, earthy smell could be detected throughout Amherst this weekend, as the community came together for the 17th annual Extravaganja and the second annual Spring Concert on the Hill. With clear blue skies and the sun finally shining warm, it was a perfect weekend for a celebration.

On Saturday, the University of Massachusetts' Cannabis Reform Coalition (CRC) sponsored Extravaganja, an event supporting the freedom of marijuana. Paying homage to the hippie culture, Extravaganja saw reggae, rap and rock bands setting the mood. Booths were lining the perimeter of the Amherst Common, selling handmade clothes, tie dye T-shirts and an array of blown-glass pieces.

These booths, however, are not what make Extravaganja a unique event. It's the people. Looking around the lawn, one could see individuals of every age and every style, those who were there in support of the issue, and those who were just along for the ride.

Howard Hanna, 31, has lived in Amherst just under a year. He was just planning on grabbing some food downtown when the stream of people heading toward the Common pulled him in. Though he wasn't sure at first, he quickly "got a feel for what [the festival] is endorsing," he said.

"I'm just looking around, taking it in," he continued. "It's a great community event."

While there were definitely a fair share of people like Hanna, the majority of the people attending Extravaganja seemed to be more than familiar with the issues.

Attendees donned whatever marijuana-related clothing they had, from one girl who wore a white pull over decorated with pink leaves, to one man who wore shorts, a backwards hat with a leaf decal and a cape.

Some people opted for no clothes at all. An older man with a long gray beard walked confidently around the festival with nothing on but brown rags and huge green pack on his back. Another girl, grooving to the live music provided by a string of bands booked by the CRC wore nothing on her chest but painted leaves.

Between the bands, speakers would talk about the issue of legalizing marijuana. One impassioned man urged people to vote, discussing the referendum that will be on the November ballot that will decriminalize marijuana.

"If the two parties don't appeal to you, there's always a third party," he yelled to the crowd.

Greg Depot and Art Laramee, both residents of the area, are familiar with Extravaganja, having come to the festival a few times before. When asked if they supported the cause, both men answered with a strong "yes."

"It's probably the least of all evils," said Laramee, continuing to say that it's no worse than drinking.

The culture and atmosphere of Extravaganja would have been right at home in the '60s. People with long, braided hair were dancing without a care in front of the stage, people were getting their faces painted and body painted dancers were hula-hooping around. Bob Marley would have been proud.

The next day, on 4/20 itself, the Central Area Government (CAG) put on their Concert on the Hill. Starting at noon and running until dask, local bands played as Frisbees and footballs flew through the air. Student-run businesses on campus set up booths selling burgers and drinks. The CAG offered free waters and munchies.

The hill was a sea of different faces, peaking at close to 1,000 people. The event was a culmination of a lot of hard work by the CAG. According to junior Mike Megaro, the governor of CAG, they started planning last semester, after the similar fall concert Rockfestberfest.

A lot of the publicity was done via Facebook, which proved to be more than effective.

"It's awesome ... we're expecting over a thousand," said Bilal Janjua, the lieutenant governor of CAG, early in the day.

CAG was able to provide food for this huge number by striking a deal with the Blue Wall. Audio Promedia provided the sound equipment and the UMass Arts Council gave the CAG a grant, both of which made the whole concert possible.

There were seven bands playing over the course of the day, all with very different sounds. There were funk/jazz trios, '90s powerpop bands, among others. On the Rocks got the crowd on its feet with covers like "Love Shack."

At 4:15 p.m. the crowd stood like a wave and started to boo the cop car that had appeared at the top of the hill. According to eyewitnesses, a police officer searched someone's bags and then took the culprit in the car.

Less than five minutes later, the party mood returned, as the Boston-based jam band State Your Mind took the stage. Exactly at 4:20 p.m., cheers echoed around the hill and the band started to play. Throughout their performance, the members of State Your Mind would wish the hill a happy 4/20.

The community spirit was prevalent on the hill. People were grilling their own burgers and playing catch, just hanging out and having a good time.

Johanna Mayorga, a UMass sophomore, was enjoying herself, despite expressing the sentiment that the concert was a little hyped up.

"I've been having a good time - very chill. I missed [relaxing]," she said.

Senior Thomas "Stubbins" Hill agreed. Though he wasn't partaking in most of the festivities of the day, he was still enjoying the music and the sun, and, as he said, "I caught myself tapping my toes a little bit to State Your Mind."

The weekend seemed to be a success for both the CRC and CAG. It brought together a community on a beautiful spring weekend for a cause that resonates with a lot of UMass students and Amherst community members.

Stephanie McPherson can be reached at smcphers@dailycollegian.com.

People of all ages came to the Amherst Common in celebration of the 17th annual Extravaganja festival for good music and relaxation on April 19.

Indie-rock band polices Pearl Street

By Brian Wood
Collegian Staff

(Editor's note: This story was originally published on April 29.)

With a backdrop of sirens and the unified chanting of their name, Tokyo Police Club emerged onto a tranquil, illuminated stage amidst a hue of blue light and much fanfare. What followed was far from a peaceful Saturday night.

Translating their frenzied material seamlessly in the live setting, the band powered through the lengths of almost their entire discography before a capacity crowd at the Pearl Street Night Club. Four-piece bands generally don't create the kind of energy and depth of sound that the Canadian quartet mustered, and for that the band deserves their due. Whether rattling tambourines, emphatically clapping, or incorporating crowd interaction, the band not only stretched the limitations of what a relatively simple four-piece arrangement can offer in a live environment, they abandoned them altogether.

The frantic pace of their recorded works took on new life on stage, aided by the band's theatrical flair, engaging material, and the elaborate circle of fluorescent punctuations that accompanied every second of their set. Surrounded by synchronized glowing pillars, every break down was met with an elaborate array of colors, and every lull was met with soothing and still light. This added visual provided a unique dimension to their stage performance, accentuating the insatiable highs and melodic lows of their set list.

Bassist and lead vocalist Dave Monks was front and center and proved to be a stabilizing force to the band's eccentric on-stage persona. His bass lines carried the majority of the night's selections and were accented by Graham Wright's over-the-top keyboard arrangements and the spirited drumming of Greg Alsop.

Guitarist Josh Hook served in a variety of roles, playing his guitar positioned well below his midsection and periodically letting it hang from its strap in favor of inspiring clap-alongs and feverishly providing a supplemental layer of tambourine.

Wright was the true showman of the quartet, owning his corner of the stage with an unparallel flair for the dramatic. The audience could

See TOKYO POLICE on page 7

Indie-rock band, Tokyo Police Club, entertained the Pearl Street Night Club on April 26.

Tokyo Police Club plays NoHo

TOKYO POLICE from page 6

see the sweat drip from Wright's hair and collect on the lenses of his black-rimmed glasses and the exhausted expression on his face as he screamed into the microphone, lunging over his synthesizer, desperate to reach the audience.

When he wasn't playing or grinding his hips into the casing of his keyboard, he was violently rattling and slamming a tambourine, using his free hand to punctuate the fourth beats so hard your palms felt sore even from the back of the clubroom.

On this night, one of the biggest criticisms of the band's records turned out to be one of their live shows greatest strengths. With a discography that runs under an hour in length, the band provided a taste of everything, both old and new, and delivered their quick hitting songs with all the necessary dynamism.

Despite their newest album "Elephant Shell" being released just this past Tuesday on Saddle Creek Record, the crowd was familiar with the wide range of the new material performed by the band. Slower selections such as "Juno" and opener "Listen to the Math" resonated through the clubroom and were met with softly mouthed audience renditions to accompany the relatively calm lightshow.

Upbeat songs like the cheekily titled "Your English is Good" and the clap-along single "Tessellate" caused quite a stir in the crowd, as dancing broke out in patches throughout the packed room while those on the outskirts were likewise helpless to stand motionless.

As is almost always the case, the band's older material garnered the most positive response from the crowd. Tearing through tracks from "A Lesson in Crime," the bands 2006 release, the band managed to supplement their newest material with their established works, maintaining a delicate balance throughout the length of the set.

"Nature of the Experiment" elicited the warmest response of the night. The frantically paced number got people moving in unison with the song's aggressive pace and singing out with a complete lack of restraint in unison with Monks' vocals, which arguably sounded superior in the flesh then they did on the songs digital counterpart.

The band fittingly concluded the night with "Cheer it On," a song that served as the introduction to their first album and the band as a whole. As band and crowd yelled in unison along with the song's chorus "When you're standing near/ Tokyo Police Club/ when you're standing next to me/ Tokyo Police Club," the lyrics developed new meaning. With each emphatic declaration of their namesake it became increasingly obvious that the song was no longer an introduction; rather, it was a statement that they had truly arrived.

Brian Wood can be reached at bjwood@student.umass.edu.

Let the zombie games begin

Humans vs. Zombies invades UMass campus

By Stephanie McPherson
Collegian Staff

(Editor's note: This story originally ran on October 31, 2007.)

Close your curtains. Lock your doors. And whatever you do, do not go outside without your socks. Because starting at midnight on Halloween, many University of Massachusetts students' worst fear will be realized: zombies will invade.

Obviously, people aren't really becoming the undead, but the excitement and preparations surrounding the event (Humans vs. Zombies (HvZ) sure feels like it. People can now execute those long-gestating plans of anti-zombie combat.

"A lot of people think about that sort of thing, I've noticed, and most people I talk to are more than ready to discuss escape routes and their weapon of choice against the undead masses," said Dante Ciliberti, one of the co-organizers of UMass's Capture the Flag Registered Student Organization that is hosting the game.

Because that's what "Humans vs. Zombies" is - a huge, intricately-organized, campus-wide game of tag. But the premise is more interesting than a simple "Tag, you're it," and participants have many more defenses than simply touching the ground and naming a TV show.

Humans vs. Zombies was created in 2005 by two students at Goucher College in Baltimore, Md. Brad Scappington and Chris Weed had no idea the game designed for their small college would become so popular, on and off the Goucher campus.

"It's turned into a huge phenomenon," said Weed in a documentary on Goucher's fourth HvZ game.

Since its conception, Humans vs. Zombies has invaded campuses country-wide, from the University of Pittsburgh to Cornell, and from Tennessee Technological University to UMass, according to the Humans vs. Zombies UMass Wikipedia page.

The game is in its second attempt at UMass. With plans falling through last year, HvZ has strong leaders this fall in the co-founders of the Capture the Flag RSO, Ciliberti and Dev in Ashe, both UMass seniors.

The duo based the rules for the UMass game off of the original guidelines laid down by the Goucher founders. First of all, to play, students have to be registered by the start of the game at midnight on Halloween. They can do so by clicking the link provided by the HvZ Facebook group. Interested students can register right up until the game begins.

The game starts with one or very few zombies - those who are doomed from the get-go. When HvZ 2007 officially begins, the original undead will be notified via e-mail, and the zombie feast will commence. The long-term goal is survival. Humans have to outlive the zombies, and zombies have to continue snacking on humans until all players are walking corpses.

No real cannibalism will occur, of course. Zombies, who are identified by a bandana on their heads, must tag the humans, who wear their bandanas on their arms. Once a human is tagged and converted into a zombie, they have to join their new teammates in sporting the bandana on their heads. They must also turn in the ID hedge they are given at the beginning of the game, so their attacker can upload their information to the game's Web site. This ensures that all players know who the enemy is.

The humans are not completely helpless in their fight for life. There are certain munitions the humans can employ to "stun" a zombie for 15 minutes, rendering their "biting" abilities useless for that time. No human should be caught dead without a balled up sock or some marshmallows to hurl at approaching zombies. If a zombie doesn't "eat" or tag a human in 48 hours, that zombie "dies" and is out of the game. A team wins either when all humans have been converted, or when all zombies have died of starvation.

Humans vs. Zombies is no short game of tag. It can last from a few days up to a few weeks. So as not to interrupt classes, there are a number of designated safe zones. These include, but are not limited to, academic buildings, the W.E.B. DuBois Library, inside PVTA buses, sports practices and "places of work (as long as the player is on the clock)," according to UMass Wiki.

In order to succeed in Humans vs. Zombies, players will have to band together.

"Most people who try to go solo end up becoming part of the zombie horde," said Ciliberti. He is hoping HvZ will prove to be a team-building experience, as well as a zombie movie come to life.

As in any battle, strategy is essential for both teams. This is clearly evident in the Goucher documentary, and UMass humans have gotten a head start. According to Ciliberti, teams have already begun to organize and plan their courses of action.

"Apparently," he said, "they run nightly practice drills in the hall."

The Humans vs. Zombies Facebook group currently has about 550 members, and Ciliberti is hoping at least 450 more people will officially register to play. With that large of a number, it will unite people who wouldn't otherwise have met.

"I'm guessing that HvZ will bring a lot of friends together at UMass, just like it has at other schools," Ciliberti said.

Alex Silber, a sophomore at UMass, is excited to battle the zombies. "What I like about the game [is] the fact that we work together to destroy evil," he said.

The Humans vs. Zombies forum, which can also be accessed through Facebook, echoes the excitement of Silber. The posts are filled with confidant claims of being able to hold off the zombies, should one find oneself the last human alive. The forum also has sections to discuss strategy, but beware - just because zombies are undead, it doesn't mean they can't read.

So when the clock strikes midnight on All Hallows Eve, tie your bandanas, grab your marshmallows, and get ready for an epic fight for survival and dominance between humans and zombies.

Stephanie McPherson can be reached at smcphers@dailycollegian.com.

Humans vs. Zombies explodes onto the UMass campus at midnight on Halloween.

Walking with the dinosaurs

By Ryan McAskill
Collegian Staff

(Editor's note: This story was originally published on March 31.)

Over the last few days, the Mullins Center has been the home of a show that can only be described as big.

"Walking with Dinosaurs: The Live Experience," took over the University of Massachusetts arena last Thursday and stayed for seven shows through yesterday. Opening night drew a respectable crowd, and size only grew as word of mouth spread.

The Mullins Center went through a dramatic transformation for the show. The floor, which has been covered with grayish-black flooring and has a similarly-colored hill in the center, is about the same size as the ice when the boards are in place for hockey games. The first three rows up from the floor are blocked off to prevent any arrant tails from hitting spectators.

The far end of the arena is also blocked off and has become the entrance for the large stars.

The show begins with an announcement that flash photography is not allowed because it may startle the normally easy going beasts, leading to unwelcome results. Additionally, cell phones are to be turned off, which shouldn't matter because cell reception will not be available for another 65 million years anyway.

Following the announcements came the introduction of the tour guide for the evening - and the only human character in the show -paleontologist Huxley, currently played by Jonathan Bliss and James Roberts.

Huxley explains fossils and how we have knowledge about dinosaurs and their time period. He also talks about Pangaea, the one, giant continent represented by the hill in the center of the floor.

A pile of eggs appear from a corner of the hill and begin to hatch. As Huxley talks about them, the first of the life-size dinosaurs appears in a Lilienstemus. One of the smaller units in the show, the Lilienstemus is also the first of the individually-manned puppet units in the production.

Following the Lilienstemus is a life-size Plateosaurus, which stands 10 ft. tall and 31 ft. long.

From there, the show progresses quickly through the 40-minute first act before intermission arrives.

The second act is the more impressive of the two and features many well-known and fan-favorite dinosaurs.

"Walking with Dinosaurs: The Live Experience" transformed the Mullins Center for seven showings, each drawing a respectable audience.

It opens with Huxley telling us we have jumped 30-million years in "what seemed like only a 20-minute intermission."

The floor, now covered with smoke, is fairly open as the Pangaea hill has now broken up and moved outwards to the corners. Dropping from the rafters in front of the giant screen is an Ornithocheirus, or Pterodactyl.

The second act continues to roll on as Raptors and the always-popular Tyrannosaurus Rex, both baby and mama, make appearances.

The introduction of the T-Rex is a particularly amusing moment, which everyone in the audience will enjoy. When mama T-Rex enters, her roar literally shakes the Mullins Center.

The second act, also 40-minutes, wraps up with a dramatic light show as the meteor strikes the Earth, thus ending the existence of the dinosaurs.

The true stars of the show are, not surprisingly, the animatronic and puppet dinosaurs. From the moment they walk out, you forget that they are simply large robots or people in suits. Every detail is captured, and the dinosaurs appear so life-like that you want out reach out and pet one.

The overall production is on the same scale as a Disney World attraction, minus Mickey Mouse. Everything is over the top, but not so much that it becomes distracting. There is a good mix of humor, action, information and "awww" moments that gave everyone something positive to take away.

While it helps to be a fan of dinosaurs or robots, you don't need to be either to enjoy the show. With an audience that ranges from eight to 90-years-old, there is something for everyone.

To truly appreciate the life-size animatronics, they need to be seen in person. Video and pictures don't do the wireless robots justice.

The show is completely unique and creates an atmosphere that brings out the inner-child in everyone. As Huxley put it, "life on Earth will never again be this big."

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskill a dailycollegian.com

Lou Reed channels inner poet

By S.P. Sullivan
Collegian Staff

(Editor's note: This story was originally published on April 23.)

Thurston Moore, the Sonic Youth frontman who opened for Lou Reed at The Calvin Theater on April 20, met mixed reactions from the standing-room-only crowd. Not everyone in attendance appreciated the experimental, sometimes dissonant sound produced by Moore and his fellow musicians.

The uninitiated might've also mistaken the chanted "Lou's" for boos, but as soon as Reed took the stage Sunday, the crowd was his.

Without any introductory remarks, the former Velvet Underground frontman got the night started with "Mad," from "Ecstasy," his 2000 concept album about his experience with relationships. Reed's throaty, conversationalist singing voice hasn't been curbed by age. Reed, aged 66, was dressed casual-cool in jeans, sneakers and a sleeveless black T-shirt, curly dark hair just barely going gray.

And while his eclectic body of work has incorporated a lot of sound switching, the night's performance was very blues-based, guitar-driven rock.

He followed "Mad" with a rendition of the Velvet Underground classic "Sweet Jane" from the 1970 album "Loaded." During the intro, Reed left his post at the microphone to address the crowd, still chanting their "Lou's" before breaking into the opening lyric, "Standing on the corner/ suitcase in my hand."

"Sweet Jane" was coupled with another Underground classic, "I'm Set Free," complimented with accordion by his keyboard player, musician Kevin Hearn of Barenaked Ladies fame.

Reed returned to his more recent work with an equally accordion-infused version of "Ecstasy" from the eponymous album, the guitars jangling and his drummer, Tony "Thunder" Smith switching between his drum set and a pair of bongos.

Mid song, Reed let his guitar hang as he recited, gesticulating more like a performance poet than a rock star, "I see a child through a window with a bib/ And I think of us and what we almost did/ The Hudson rocketing with light/ The ships pass the Statue of Liberty at night."

Returning his hands to show off his chops, Reed let the notes of his guitar solo hang before allowing Smith, a world-renowned drummer and producer, to follow with an impressive solo of his own, punctuating each symbol crash with a pump of his fist.

By the time he got comfortable, Reed lost his too-cool-for-small talk demeanor and began to speak to the crowd. Putting down his guitar and addressing the audience, Reed asked his lead guitarist, Steve Hunter, "This is the one out of that movie, right?"

Hunter answered, "Yes, this is the one out of that movie."

The crowd cheered and Reed let out a "Yay for Juno" and a crack about foreign movies outsourcing American jobs before breaking into the Velvet Underground's "I'm Sticking With You," featured recently on the "Juno" soundtrack, with vocal accompaniment from drummer Smith.

Accompanied by organ, Reed announced, "So this is a poem by Edgar Allen Poe," before delving into a piece from "The Raven," Reed's 2003 musical treatment of the works of the famed poet.

After the song, Reed reflected on the piece to the audience. "The irresistible impulse to do that which you know is wrong for you," he recited. He smiled, cocked his head. "What an idea that is - wish somebody would've told me that a while ago."

Reed introduced his "Halloween Parade" quite unsentimentally with some background. "Around Halloween, there's this parade in New York. This is a song about so many people who died of AIDS, so there's not as many people in the Halloween parade."

Reed closed his set with "Guardian Angel," also off his Poe tribute "The Raven," but the crowd wasn't having it.

Clapping hands and stomping feet after the final bows, the attendees coaxed Reed into what he was probably planning all along: an encore.

Reed and bandmates retook the stage for "Pale Blue Eyes," from the Underground's 1969 eponymous album, leaving the audience once again begging for more.

It was a conservative show for Reed, who has a penchant for the avant-garde, but stuck mostly to familiar tunes from his recent albums and Velvet Underground cache. Knowing Reed, though, who has made a career out of reinvention, it's just a temporary thing.

S.P. Sullivan can be reached at spsulliv@dailycollegian.com.

18 Plus College Night
Thursdays
The #1 Place to Party!
SKYPLEX
3 Different Rooms/3 DJ's spinning the best
In Top 40 Dance, House and Select Mashup
THE ULTIMATE HOT BODY CONTEST
$100 Best Male $100 Best Female
The Hottest 18 Plus
SATURDAY NIGHT
Dance Party
NOW HIRING!
Bartenders
Cashiers
Security Staff
Barback
Waitstaff
SATURDAY
SKYPLEX
SkyPlex 10 Stearns Sq Downtown Springfield 413.827.9000 www.SkyPlex.com

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL -W.SPFLD
Special Student Rate
Local-National Placement
Includes Certification
1-800-357-3210
BostonBartender.com

Minutemen fall in NIT Finals

BASKETBALL from page 12

Yet UMass's success on the glass did not translate into excellent low-post defense. In the first half, Milligan (14 points, nine rebounds) successfully adapted the physical play dictated by the officials, holding Buckeye forward Kosta Koufos to one made field goal.

Koufos erupted for 21 points in the second half, earning 2008 NIT Most Outstanding Player honors. Milligan collected his fourth foul with 12 minutes remaining and sat on the bench for the majority of the period. Koufos then took over the game against an overmatched Luke Bonner and a slightly hobbled Tony Gaffney.

"Dante was playing good basketball and it really could have helped us more having him in there down the stretch," Ford said.

UMass scored the most first-half points (41) of any Ohio State opponent this season. However, the Maroon and White scored nine through the first eight minutes of the second. The scoring drought to begin the second half allowed Ohio State to build a nine-point lead by the 10-minute mark.

The Buckeye's halftime adjustments focused on slowing the game down to minimize needless turnovers and look for the best option on offense. On many possessions, Buckeye players found themselves either left wide-open on the wing or with no Minuteman impeding their path to the basket.

Yet it was the team's ability to penetrate into the frontcourt that opened multiple options for Ohio State.

"In the first half, we were very timid inside," Matta said. "We wanted to get on the attack mode. When you play a team like this that takes a lot of chances, the one thing we felt we had to do was drive to the basket."

Defensively, the Minutemen were determined to dictate the tempo of the game from the beginning. UMass hoped to wear down the Buckeyes with an aggressive full-court press, while quickly moving the ball up-court on offense. The Minutemen made 12 3-pointers, but allowed Ohio State to shoot 53 percent from beyond the arc.

Once the Minutemen tied the game at 68 with 6:19 remaining, they looked to be executing the plan to perfection. However, Koufos scored OSU's next seven points to permanently put the Buckeyes in the lead.

"They withstood a lot of the pressure that we caused on both ends of the court," Ford said. "I thought we gave up too many easy lay-ups that allowed them to rest for a second. We made enough 3s to win the game; we just gave up too many late to allow our style of play to fatigue them."

After another Ohio State run, the Minutemen cut the deficit to five points with 1:44 left. Milligan's reentry into the game was not enough to spark the UMass offense, as the Buckeyes slipped away with the victory.

Michael King can be reached at mking@dailycollegian.com.

UMass beats defending champs

NIT from page 12

runners-up. UMass came back from big halftime deficits against both Syracuse (22 points) and Akron (12) in the previous rounds.

"We came in the locker room very positive, and we knew we were going to make a run like we always do," Forbes said. "It's an ongoing thing with us."

"It shows how well we played as a team, and the coaching staff is bringing the winning tradition back at UMass," junior Chris Lowe said.

The Minutemen had strong contributions from all five starters – particularly in the second half – as all of them finished with at least eight points. Forbes (19) and Milligan (17) led the way, while Ricky Harris and Lowe each scored 16.

But it was Forbes that had the biggest baskets. Up five points with fewer than five minutes remaining, Forbes took the shot clock down to three before launching a 3-pointer. The shot went down, giving UMass a 62-54 lead. On the very next offensive possession, Forbes pulled off the same trick – this time taking a difficult fadeaway jumper a few seconds before the shot clock ticked to zero.

That shot gave the Minutemen a 10-point lead with 4 minutes, 14 seconds remaining in regulation. The Gators pulled within six points on four separate occasions, but never really made a threat due to 13 missed free throws – many of which came late.

"Our missed opportunities at the free-throw line really gave them some momentum to make plays," Florida coach Billy Donovan said. "I thought their speed and quickness on the perimeter caused us some problems – going by us and getting into the lane."

In the first half the only team getting into the lane was Florida. Marreese Speights had his way inside against Milligan and others, almost registering a double-double with nine points and 11 rebounds. Other Gators were getting easy looks down-low. And when they did happen to miss, they often collected the offensive rebound and made the put-back.

The Minutemen, on the other hand, settled for long looks at the basket in the first half. Of the 34 shots they took in the opening half, 14 of them were from 3-point range. Although many of those attempts were relatively uncontested, only one went down; UMass finished the half shooting 11-of-34 overall.

After halftime UMass started to knock down its shots. The Minutemen did hit four 3-pointers in the second half, but they really began to push the tempo harder offensively, getting better looks at the basket. Lowe and Forbes made a concerted effort to drive the lane and they were rewarded with easy lay-ups.

"We told them we needed to get the game going up and down; the game's just not going fast enough the way we want it to go," Ford said about what he told his team during halftime. "It's crazy, but we were happy to be down nine points [at halftime], it could have been a lot worse."

Speights had a good second half, finishing with 16 points and 18 rebounds, but his teammates struggled. Freshman point guard Nick Calathes had 12 points and seven rebounds, but his shot was off all night (5-of-19) and he had a hard time getting his teammates involved with an uncharacteristically low three assists.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com

Better
It's what we do...

Helping you feel better...

- routine, same-day and urgent medical care
- mental health care
- eye care and optical services
- physical therapy
- acupuncture
- mind/body medicine
- specialty care
- allergy clinic
- full-service pharmacy
- faculty/staff assistance program
- onsite laboratory and radiology services
- and more

Helping you live better...

- health education
- substance abuse prevention programs
- tobacco cessation
- nutrition and eating disorders services
- athletic health services
- travel medicine clinic
- support and therapy groups
- volunteer, outreach and academic opportunities
- online health information, resources
- big discounts on eyewear, pharmacy products and more

Taking better care of you...

- college health specialists
- convenient campus location
- open 24/7 during the semester

University Health Services
577-5000 • www.umass.edu/uhs
UMASS AMHERST

UM advances with OT victory

Maroon and White overcome 4-goal deficit in second half

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

(Editors note: This story was originally published on April 25, 2008.)

It looked like it was all over for Kathleen Typadis and the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team against Richmond Friday afternoon.

After an unlikely second-half comeback against the three-time defending Atlantic 10 Champions, the senior sprinted up the field looking to get off a desperation shot to tie the game as the clock winded down. The McGuirk Stadium crowd counted down the final seconds of the game, when, suddenly, an official's whistle blew.

This seemed to signal the end of the game and a season full of ups and downs for the Minutewomen, but the clock still showed one second remaining. Working through three Spider defenders, the captain was fouled while attempting a shot inside the critical-scoring area, resulting in a free-position shot.

Two more seconds were added to the game clock as Typadis lined up to take the biggest shot of the game and of her career.

"I kind of just went blank and just thought, 'I'm at practice right now, with my girls, its fine' and I just kind of took a breath," Typadis said.

She faked high and rolled a shot into the right corner of the net past Spider goalkeeper Erica Marrocco, tying the game for the first time all afternoon, 9-9.

UMass won its 16th draw control in the ensuing overtime period, setting up Typadis's game-winning goal with less than two minutes to go in overtime – propelling the Minutewomen to a 10-9 victory over the Spiders. The Minutewomen will host Temple in the A-10 Championship game on Sunday at 1 p.m.

UMass last made the title game in 2003. Strangely enough, the Minutewomen also defeated Richmond that year in overtime to advance to the finals against the Owls. They lost to Temple, 15-9, in that game.

"We worked on just being aggressive, and the midfield and the transition was our strength [in this game], but it is actually our weakness," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "So we just kept going with it, and we kept on pressing them hard."

The defense, led by Jackie Rosenzweig and Julie Papaleo, held Richmond to a single goal in the second half after allowing eight in the first. Redshirt senior Krissy Anderson made five saves in the period; her most important, however, came on a free-position shot with 38 seconds remaining in overtime.

Lexie Marrocco, who tied the tournament record for most goals in a game with six, faked a shot, that hit Anderson right in the stick. UMass controlled possession for the next 35 seconds, leaving the Spiders no time to tie the game.

"Richmond is a phenomenal team, and we all kind of helped out and Krissy made some good saves," Venechanos said. "On attack, we put some goals away. In the first half, we had some shots, but we just didn't put them away."

While Richmond's offensive unit stalled in the second frame, UMass was effective, generating five goals. Typadis and redshirt junior Kaytlin McCormick combined to score four consecutive goals to bring UMass within one before Typadis tied it.

The Minutewomen trailed, 8-4, at halftime, as the Spiders started the game on a three-goal run.

After Kelsey Schreiner's goal put UMass on the board 19 minutes into the game, Lexie Marrocco and midfielder Mandy Friend each found the net for Richmond to extend UMass's deficit to four.

Merritt Cosgrove and Jeannette Villapiano scored back-to-back goals for the Minutewomen, before Lexie Marrocco netted three of the next four goals before halftime.

McCormick, using a number of maneuvers off the dodge, recorded back-to-back goals and Typadis took on numerous double and triple teams.

Schreiner and Vicki Farrell were both effective on the draw control, as the team held the advantage, 16-7. Jackie Lyons also contributed to the come-from-behind win, securing multiple ground balls.

"This is the biggest comeback I've been a part of, especially with our backs against the wall – this group has never beaten Richmond before, so it will give us great momentum going into Sunday's game," Venechanos said.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

PJ STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

Senior Kathleen Typadis led the Minutewomen to the Atlantic 10 Championship with a game-tying shot with seconds left in the semifinals. Typadis was the second-leading scorer for UMass with 29 goals on the season.

Schneider saves 19 in victory

LACROSSE from page 12

practice for five months now with the fall into the spring," Cannella said of his freshmen. "We knew Pete McNichols, Zach Rogers and Ryan Hantverk could play. Whether they were going to be tentative or nervous, who knows?"

The success of the young players aside, their inexperience allowed the Pride back into the game once the second half began. The Minutemen turned the ball over nine times in the third quarter, and careless passing caused most of the mishaps.

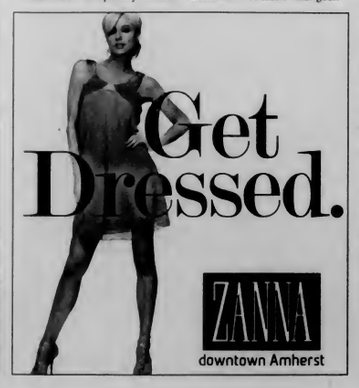
Hofstra took advantage of the possessions at 9:18 of the third when Ford took a pass from Michael Colleluori to the right of Schneider. He quickly circled the goal and fired a shot over Schneider's left shoulder.

Sixty-two seconds later, with the Minutemen down a man as a result of a brutal Stephen Zorkers cross-check, Ford struck again. This time a shot from the top of the restraining box found its way through a throng of players stationed in front of the goal and past Schneider.

The Hofstra bench erupted as Ford and his teammates celebrated on the field. The momentum quickly shifted to favor the Pride, but junior Joe Reale's win on the following faceoff halted the Hofstra run. The teams traded possessions until Federico's goal, at 4:22 of the period, permanently squashed the confidence of the Pride. Reale won 10-of-16 faceoffs on the afternoon and also assisted on UMass's final goal.

After winning the faceoff cleanly, he raced down field and found Balise who beat Orlando seven seconds after Hantverk scored to swell UMass's lead to 7-3.

"[Reale] started off 1-for-3, but he's a pretty good athlete. He didn't win the draw cleanly a couple of times, but he won it as an athlete getting the groundball," Cannella said. "We have a lot of faith in Joe, so we stuck with him. But Bobby Hayes, Nick Glasser and Stephen Zorker are all ready."



The Pride maintained possession for most of the fourth quarter, outshooting the Minutemen 14-4. But Schneider kept the Minutemen alive with seven saves in the period. With 4:45 left in the game, the Pride peppered Schneider with four shots in one minute but couldn't beat the net minder.

"We're going to need that from Doc. His performance, 12 saves in the second half, was exactly what we needed," Cannella said. "We turned the ball over so many times that we needed to lean on our defense and Doc."

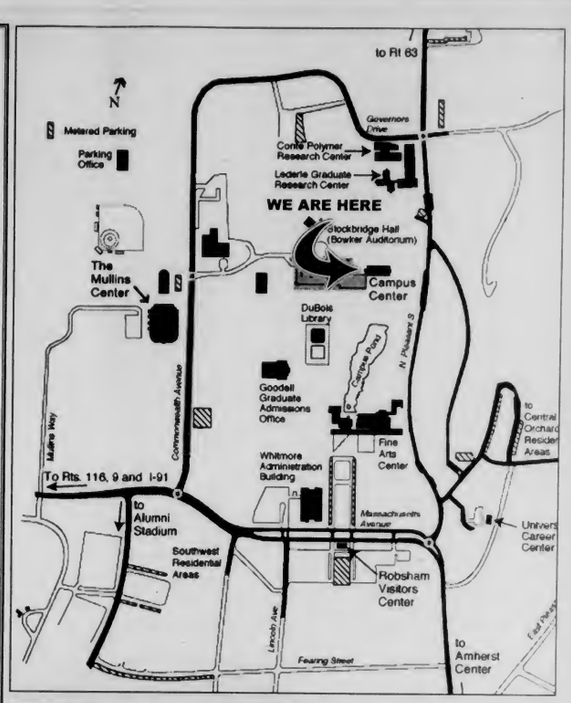
Game notes

Senior captain Rory Pedrick missed the season opener with an undisclosed injury. Cannella gave no timetable for his return ... Redshirt junior attack Evan Blum and sophomore Christian Hain both left the field with apparent arm injuries during the game. Although both returned to the lineup ... Senior Brian Danvers led the Minutemen with five groundballs. Overall, UMass narrowly edged the Pride in groundballs at 29-27.

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com.

Dear Class of 2012,

On behalf of The Daily Collegian staff, writers and employees, welcome to the University of Massachusetts. I hope this newspaper finds you enjoying your introduction to UMass. The next four years here in Amherst will provide you with the opportunity to explore your interests and to prepare for the future.



The Collegian has been a staple on campus since 1890 and we've been publishing daily since 1967. We operate independently from the University with funding solely from advertising revenue.

We hope that The Collegian will become a part of your daily routine at UMass. We cover everything from UMass sports to important news stories to local concerts and events. Every day there's class, a new issue will be waiting for you in one of the many newsstands located across campus.

If you're interested in working for New England's Largest College Daily, check out this page for more information. We have many unique opportunities for students of all majors and skills. Come down and see us in the Campus Center basement and become a part of a special organization.

Sincerely,

Michael King
Editor in Chief

Once you enter the Campus Center, take the escalator down one story and turn right. Walk toward the wall in front of you and you will see the Collegian door.

SEND YOUR APPLICATION TO:

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center Way
Amherst, MA 01003

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN STAFF APPLICATION

NAME: _____ PHONE: _____

HOMETOWN: _____ E-MAIL: _____

MAJOR: _____ MINOR: _____

DESIRED POSITION

ADVERTISING REPRESENTATIVE ☐

MULTIMEDIA ☐

DISTRIBUTION ☐

PHOTOGRAPHER ☐

WRITER:

ARTS&LIVING	☐	arts@dailycollegian.com
EDITORIAL	☐	editorial@dailycollegian.com
NEWS	☐	news@dailycollegian.com
SPORTS	☐	sports@dailycollegian.com

UMass drops game with BC

Penalties hurt Minutemen in state-rival game with Eagles

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

(Editor's note: This story was originally published on Oct. 1, 2007.)

CHESTNUT HILL – A week after the Massachusetts football team seemed to have everything figured out, the game became very confusing again. The Minutemen fell to the No. 11/12 Boston College Eagles, 24-14, in front of 44,111 fans.

Quarterback Liam Coen (12-of-24, 151 yards, two touchdowns) reaggravated his knee injury early in the fourth quarter, forcing him out of the game. But the Minutemen (4-1, 2-0 Colonial Athletic Association) effectively limited their chances with another penalty-ridden performance – returning to the miscues they got away with earlier in the season.

BC quarterback Matt Ryan (24-of-42, 204 yards, one touchdown) led the Eagles (5-0, 3-0 Atlantic Coast Conference) to an early lead, and did enough the rest of the way to keep UMass in the rearview mirror.

"We just didn't execute as well as we needed to in the first half," UMass coach Don Brown said. "Our effort and energy throughout the entire day was absolutely tremendous, but you're not going to beat he No. 12 team in the nation with 17 penalties."

Those 17 penalties cost the Minutemen 114 yards in a game in which they closed the gap to a field goal late in the third quarter. However, false starts, pass interference calls and holding penalties stagnated several UMass drives and prevented the Minutemen from taking control of the game when they had the chance.

BC struck first with a field goal on its second possession and capitalized early on UMass mistakes. Following the Eagles' first three points, the Minutemen went three-and-out on a possession that resulted in 12 yards of offense.

An illegal block negated an eight-yard burst by running back Matt Lawrence, and a false start on the next snap put the Minutemen in a first-and-23 hole that they did not climb out of. Backed up into his own end zone, punter Brett Arnold gave BC the longest field he could, punting to the UMass 49.

Ryan took advantage of the situation, driving the Eagles 49 yards, capped by a one-yard score by running back Andre Callender. UMass gave the Eagles two free first downs with a defensive holding infraction and a pass interference call that put the ball on the UMass two-yard line.

In the second quarter, the story did not change. BC drove the ball 96 yards, scoring on a nine-yard pass from Ryan to wide receiver Justin Jarvis, who beat his defender on a crossing pattern, and cut through two blockers downfield to reach the end zone. The half ended with BC holding a convincing 17-0 lead.

The third quarter belonged to the Minutemen, but the fourth was a stalemate – leaving the Maroon and White wondering where it lost its footing.

"We put ourselves in a huge hole, [but] we came out in the second half with renewed resolve, which I knew I'd get," Brown said.

The opening possession of the second half stalled, but the Minutemen established an early edge in field position. After Coen's pass to Jeremy Horne fell two yards short of a first down, Arnold placed a 51-yard punt on the BC three-yard line.

The UMass defense held the Eagles to two yards of offense, and got the ball back at the BC 41 following a 38-yard punt by Johnny Ayers.

One play later, Coen made a statement that the Minutemen were not handing over the game. UMass employed its height advantage at wide receiver when Coen dropped a perfect pass over the head of BC cornerback Taji Morris (five-foot-nine) and into the hands of Rasheed Rancher (six-foot-five), who caught it at the three and strolled into the end zone.

"We had good field position, so we took a shot," Coen said. "Sheed beat the corner. He flat beat him. That was something we did plan on. We wanted to take a couple shots."

The momentum appeared to have shifted dramatically on the following BC series. Linebackers Josh Jennings and Charles Walker jarred BC tight end Ryan Purvis and forced an apparent fumble, recovered by Jason Hatchell on the BC 28-yard line. After the official's review, however, the play was ruled an incomplete pass.

UMass forced a punt, but got the ball on its own 23-yard line, 49 yards downfield. After the teams traded punts, the Minutemen continued to pressure the Eagles. Another Coen-to-Rancher exchange brought the ball into BC territory. Coen then hit Jeremy Horne on a wide receiver screen.

Horne broke one tackle, then followed some excellent downfield blocking all the way to the end zone, closing the gap to 17-14.

That would be the closest glimpse at victory the Minutemen would get.

The Eagles responded as one would expect the 12th-ranked team in the nation to, with another score before the third frame closed out. Ryan led his offense on one more grinding drive, going 65 yards in 10 plays, icing the game by setting up a four-yard Callender rush.

Coen was knocked out of the game early in the fourth quarter, once again injuring his left knee while going down in the backfield. Backup Scott Woodward did his best impression of Coen, completing five of 11 passes for 57 yards.

A final miscue – a third-down drop of a sure first down pass by Rancher – finished off the Minutemen.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jcrenyr@student.umass.edu.

MICHAEL PHILLIPS/COLLEGIAN

Redshirt junior quarterback Liam Cohen led UMass to a 10–3 record in 2007 and to the NCAA FCS playoffs for the second-consecutive year. The Minutemen lost to Southern Illinois in the second round, 34–27.

UM capitalizes on mistakes

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

(Editor's note: This story was originally published on Oct. 29, 2007.)

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. – If you showed up 16 seconds late, you missed a record-setting touchdown pass.

If you blinked, you missed a fumble returned for a touchdown.

If you made a few quick trips to the restroom, you missed more fumbles and more touchdowns.

And if you skipped the game altogether, you missed one hell of a football game.

The 10,178 fans that showed up in the 80-degree weather were treated to a riveting, back-and-forth football game between Massachusetts (7-1, 5-0 Colonial Athletic Association) and William & Mary on Saturday at Zables Stadium. A game with seven lead changes, four missed field goals by one team, 38 points in the fourth quarter and three touchdown drives lasting under a minute.

In the end, almost all of the fans went home unhappy as the Minutemen prevailed, 48-34, in front of a raucous homecoming crowd.

"I'll be honest, I thought William & Mary came out and played as well as they possibly could play," UMass coach Don Brown said. "Everybody had a chip in [the victory]. I was really happy with our guys and the way they battled back from adversity."

UMass running back Matt Lawrence scored two touchdowns in the final 3:46 of the game, putting the Minutemen ahead for good. The senior ran for a career-high 186 yards – 126 in the second half – and three touchdowns.

William & Mary (4-4, 2-3 CAA) led at halftime, 13-10, and extended the lead to 10 with a 1-yard touchdown run by quarterback Jake Phillips midway through the third quarter. That was just the beginning of a furious pace of touchdowns, fumbles, lead-changes and everything in between.

Lawrence scored his first touchdown five minutes later from 11 yards out, cutting the deficit to three. The Tribe gave the ball right back to the Minutemen, fumbling the ball on a 7-yard completion to tight end Drew Atchison. Linebacker Josh Jennings hit Atchison just as he caught the ball, forcing it out and into the arms of Brian Ellis.

After a 25-yard run by Lawrence, backup tailback Tony Nelson scored his first touchdown of the season on a 13-yard run, giving the Minutemen a 27-24 lead. It was the fifth lead change of the game and third UMass touchdown drive spanning under a minute long.

In a 3 minute, 7 second span, the Tribe lost an 11-point lead and trailed by three. It was about to get worse in a matter of seconds.

William & Mary kick returner Thomas Schonder fumbled the ensuing kickoff, giving the Minutemen possession on the Tribe 22-yard line. UMass quarterback Liam Coen and the offense scored a third straight touchdown four plays later – this time on an 8-yard pass to tight end Ian Jorgensen. The three scores came in just over five minutes.

As it turned out a few minutes later, William & Mary wasn't the only team having trouble holding onto the football.

After a three-and-out for the Tribe, UMass got the ball back with a chance to take some time off the clock and put the game away.

But on the second play of the drive, Coen fumbled the exchange on a pitch to Nelson. The ball bounced around before linebacker Michael Pigram scooped it up and ran 42 yards for a touchdown. Suddenly William & Mary was down just 34-31, shifting the momentum back to the Tribe.

Incredibly, the next play from scrimmage was almost identical to the last. This time it was Lawrence who fumbled, and linebacker Josh Rutter picking up the football and running it back to the UMass 2-yard line.

The outcome changed this time, as the Tribe failed to pound the ball into the end zone for the go-ahead score.

After missing his previous four field goal attempts, place-kicker Brian Pate connected from 20 yards out to tie the game at 34 with 7:31 remaining in the fourth quarter.

"Probably the biggest series for our defense for the year," Brown said of the goal-line stand. "When the ball is on the 2-yard line and you make them settle for the field goal. So we don't lose the lead, we keep it in a tie scenario and our offense responded the way they're capable of."

Lawrence led the offense after the big stop, gaining 30 yards on five touches and finding the end zone on a 1-yard run to give the Minutemen a 41-34 lead.

Phillips threw four straight incompletions on the following drive, turning the ball over on downs. Lawrence gained another 22 yards and scored his third touchdown of the afternoon putting the game away at 48-34 with 35 seconds remaining.

Coen completed 17-of-27 passes and threw for 218 yards and three scores. He connected on two of those scores to Rasheed Rancher, including a 60-yard bomb on the game's first play from scrimmage – breaking Todd Bankhead's school-record for touchdown passes in a career with 52.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com

Dicato pitches gem at Fenway

Maroon and White take 1st Beanpot title since 2000

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

(Editor's note: This story was originally published on April 16, 2008.)

BOSTON — Fenway Park has quite a history.

Massachusetts pitcher Mike Dicato came just three outs away from adding to it last night in the Beanpot Championship game against rival Boston College.

Entering the bottom of the ninth inning with a 4-0 lead, Dicato walked to the mound trying to capture UMass's first Beanpot Championship since 2000. Further adding to the pressure, he was three outs away from the first UMass no-hitter in 11 years.

Following two walks to start the ninth, Dicato lost the no-hit bid when Tony Sanchez's bloop single escaped the reach of three fielders converging in right-center field. But more importantly for UMass, it escaped Fenway with the victory, 4-3, as reliever Mitchell Eilenberg shut down BC's late rally to prevent the comeback.

"I owe him dinner tonight," Dicato said of Eilenberg after the game. "He did a great job finishing the game."

Eilenberg preserved the win when Sam Shaughnessy was caught looking at strike three with the tying run at second base and the potential winning run at first. But it was Dicato's stellar performance that everyone wanted to talk about.

"He had command of all of his pitches, he was mixing it up on certain counts and he was throwing all of his pitches for strikes," catcher Bryan Garrity said. "He was battling out there and getting the job done for us."

"I had control of all of my pitches; I was confident, just in the zone," Dicato said. "It means everything to me; I grew up just a few miles from here. It's just awesome to enjoy this championship with my teammates."

Not only was Dicato a big reason UMass (11-14, 4-8 Atlantic 10) captured the title, but his stellar performance in the first round of the tournament against Harvard helped propel UMass to the championship game for the first time since 2001. Dicato pitched 6 2/3 shutout innings against the Crimson, striking out six in the 3-0 win.

Dicato was aided last night by three quick runs in the first inning off of BC starter Kevin Moran. UMass had three hits in the inning, drew a walk and benefited from a throwing error by the third baseman on a bunt attempt.

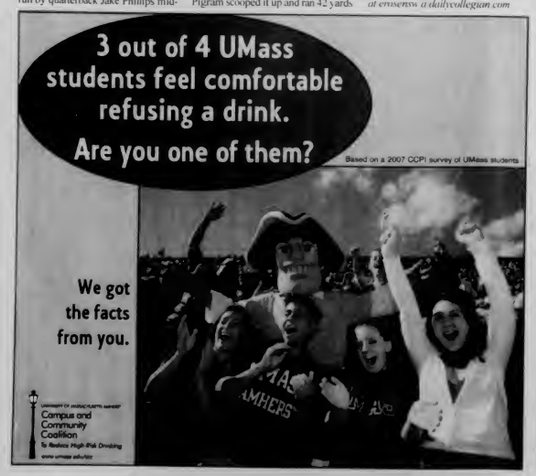
"We just tried to put as much pressure on them as possible," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "They started a freshman and he was a bit nervous. He didn't throw too many strikes and we were able to capitalize on that."

After Moran exited in the second inning, reliever Ted Ratliff shut the Minutemen down over the next 5 2/3 innings. UMass added an insurance run in the ninth inning – which proved to be the winning run – when Kyle Multner lined a single to right, scoring Andrew Black, who led off the inning with an infield single and was moved to second on a sacrifice bunt by Andy Tuetken.

Perhaps feeling a bit fatigued, Dicato walked both Barry Butera and Michael Belflore to lead off the bottom of the ninth. Sanchez appeared to be struck by the first pitch on the arm, but the umpire called him back, saying the ball hit the bat for a foul ball.

Dicato's next offering was sent into shallow right-center field, but neither Adam Tempesta at second base or outfielders Brian Baudinet or Mike Donato could come up with it.

Following the single, Eric Campbell hit a run-scoring fielder's choice, making the game 4-1. Mickey Wiswall then lined a single, bringing the Eagles one run closer at 4-2.



Dicato was lifted in favor of Eilenberg, as Dicato walked off to a huge ovation. Eilenberg hit Garret Smith on the very first pitch, loading the bases with one out. Eilenberg then ran the count 3-0 to John Spatola, but battled back and got the out on a sacrifice fly to center, which brought the score to 4-3.

Eilenberg ended the game when Shaughnessy looked at the third strike on the outside corner.

"Mitchell [entered] in a very tough spot with the championship on the line and he got his outs," Garrity said. "That's what you need from a guy coming out of the pen – to battle and compete, and that's exactly what he did."

Scott Barnsby is still the last Minuteman to throw a no-hitter. That came on April 22, 1997 against Northeastern – at Fenway Park.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

ScandihOOvians
SCANDINAVIAN DESIGN FOR LIVING & A HEALTHY LIFESTYLE

Jewelry, Fashion, Gifts, Home Accessories

22 STRONG AVENUE NORTHAMPTON
25 S. PLEASANT ST. AMHERST
(413) 586-0002 · WWW.SCANDIHOOVIANS.COM

TAKE A PHOTO OF YOURSELF WITH YOUR COMPLETED SUDOKU OR CROSSWORD AND SEE YOURSELF ON THE COMICS PAGE
COMICS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Taxes take longer than this (or so I hear).

		3		7	2
5	6		8
4		7	5				1
	8				1
7	3						8	6
			2				3
	9				3	4		1
					8		6	5
			1	4		8

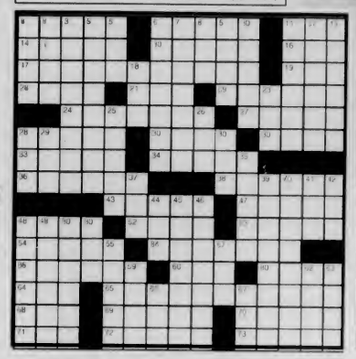
Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Superlatively slimy
6 Perform incorrectly
11 Sch. group
14 Nebraska city
15 Wept
16 Ventilate
17 Like optimistic glasses
19 Writer Deighton
20 Night: pref.
21 Holy sister
22 Gladden
24 Spirits
27 Abominable snowmen
28 God of Islam
30 Saudi
32 Eye element
33 Trigger's creator
34 Katmandu's land
36 Tom of "Tomorrow"
38 Cured
43 Talk at length
47 Mark
48 Backside
52 Bring under control
53 Crop up
54 Fire remnant
56 Cantankerous
58 Headstrong
60 Nest-egg initials
61 Storage cylinder
64 In the past
65 Badly conceived
66 No more seats
69 Boyfriends
70 Freelown currency unit
71 Stitched border
72 Uneasy feeling
73 Pockmarks

DOWN
1 Threadbare
2 "Typee" sequel
3 In an impish manner
4 Type of pony
5 Def. mil. grp.
6 Noted media theorist Marshall
7 Metallic Range product
8 Garahad's title
9 Profound
10 Peculiarly
11 Gourmet's sense
12 Makes a connection
13 "Gunsmoke" star
18 John's Yoko
23 Slippery fish
25 Rah-rah!
26 Baby's seat
28 Morning hrs.
29 Vietnam Memorial artist
31 ___ humbug!
35 Type of pad or brief
37 Furrow
39 Sting victim
40 Exaggerated
41 Begley and McMahon
42 Aberdeen's river
44 Pester persistently
45 Anthology
46 Proximal
48 Launder again
49 Political exile
50 Flowering
51 Library sec.
55 Cuban dance
57 Gossip sheet
59 Property claim
62 Easter forerunner
63 Binary digits
66 Droop
67 Part of GOP

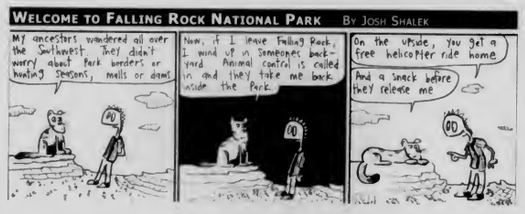
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

state schoolz hav mor fun!
comics@dailycollegian.com

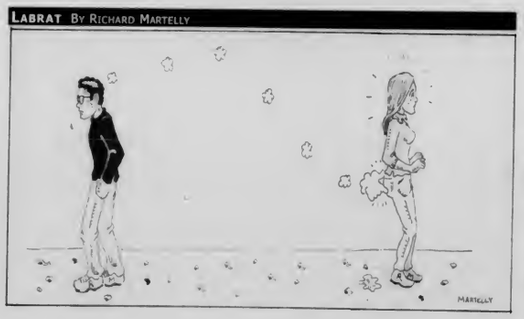


QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Reality leaves a lot to the imagination."
- John Lennon



READ IT AND WEEP BY TRAVIS DANDRO



Submit your comics!
comics@dailycollegian.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK BY JOSH SHALEK

LABRAT BY RICHARD MARTELLY

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
You might not be able to find Iran on a map, but you damn well know where in the world Carmen Sandiego is!

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Arts and crafts was never your strong-point, but the macaroni and glitter-encrusted condom will turn out awesome.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
If NASCAR was an Olympic sport, you would have a whole new reason to not watch either.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
We may never know exactly why it failed, however, it's clear that your Adopt-A-Polar Bear program was well-intentioned.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
When going on dates, you remind those around you of a scared chihuahua at a fireworks show.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
The fungus growing behind your contact lenses is actually penicillin, meaning it is both benficially antibiotic and tasty.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Your dreams will be haunted by Jermaine Dupri tonight.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Gold chains and grillz are out this year, Broseph. The hot new fad: Gold-plated facial hair. Start saving up, pal.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Sorry, Libra...Your horoscope isn't funny today.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
It takes you longer to comb your hair than it takes Ron Jeremy to complete an entire trilogy.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
You need a new catchphrase. Consider using "schlang a shiner on that one!" Or possibly "tape that one up!"

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
It may not be a mood ring, but it does change colors when you're agitated.

amherst cinema
PLEASANT STREET THEATER
51508
Present this coupon with your student ID at the Box Office of the Amherst Cinema or Pleasant Street Theater and receive a ticket for ONLY $5.00 STUDENTS offer expires 09.30.08
some restrictions may apply
amherst cinema
28 Amity St. Downtown Amherst
(413) 253-2547
www.amherstcinema.org
PLEASANT STREET THEATER
27 Pleasant St. Downtown Northampton
(413) 584-5848
www.pleasantattheater.org

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APT. FOR RENT

Hobart condos 3 Bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access), in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Japanese speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments contact phonetics lab. phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lakefront cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further. Camp Mataponi, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (small crafts, skiing, life guarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders & more. Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today toll free at 1-888-684-2267 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com.

RAFT GUIDES
Zoar Outdoor is seeking adventuresome people to be full and part-time summer raft guides. Learn how to guide a raft during our training program and spend the summer on the Deerfield River. Applicants should have customer service experience and a positive attitude and be comfortable working as a team or independently. Application deadline: Feb. 15th. Call 800-532-7483 or see www.zoaroutdoor.com/jobs.htm for an application.

Put up Posters! Through summer, car, sell, commitment needed. Up to $12/hr w/bonus. 20 hrs between Mon-Wed, excellent communicator, fast-paced, punctual, resume and formal cover letter to postering@artspromo.org. Hiring ASAP.

French speakers! Rent us your ears! $12/hr for participating in listening experiments. Contact the phonetics lab. phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu 545-6837

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Marketing Intern As a Marketing Intern (paid position) you will assist in marketing efforts to grow sales of the leading economic policy analysis model. Responsibilities include developing presentations and other marketing material, writing for newsletters, website, and blog, and assisting with internet marketing, promotions, campaigns, and other marketing efforts. Please send cover letter and resume to Fred Treyz, REMI, 433 West St., Amherst, MA 01002. fax 413-549-1038. resumes@remi.com. REMI is an eoe and maintains a drug-free workplace.

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable. Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

Spring Break from $199 Land price starting from $199 for 7 days. We also have an all inclusive hotel start from $799 per person Give us a call today it's not to late to still get away 1-800-GET-SUN-1

Spring Break 08 Hot Deals, Hot Destinations, Hot Parties. Ask about Group Deals and FREE TRIPS. 1-800-426-7710. www.sunsplashtours.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS

SUMMER 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen exceeed expectations

Maroon and White loses first-half lead, falls to OSU in final

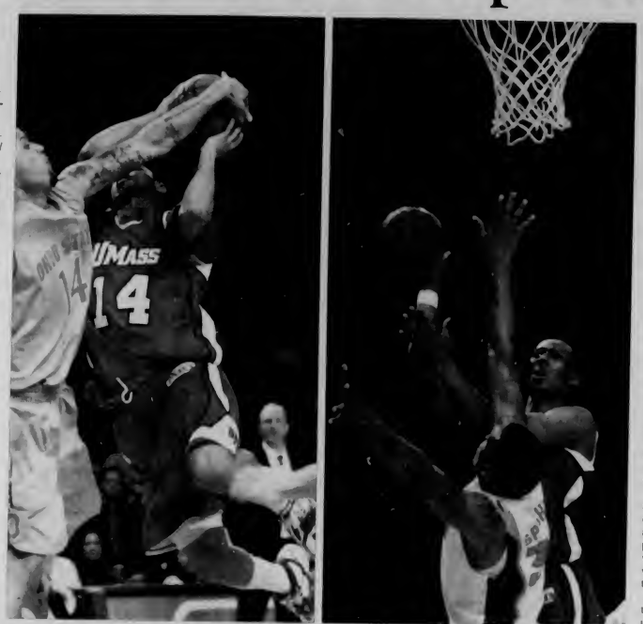
BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

(Editor's note: This story was originally published on April 4, 2008.)

NEW YORK — In a season that was about exceeding expectations for the Massachusetts men's basketball team, the Minutemen fell just short of winning a championship in 2007-08. Ultimately, the team's season and run through the National Invitation Tournament ended Thursday night at Madison Square Garden. UMass (25-11) fell in the NIT finals, 92-85, to Ohio State (23-13).

"It's been a great year; it's been a fun year," UMass coach Travis Ford said. "I thought it took one of Ohio State's best efforts to beat us. I'm just disappointed that there's no practice tomorrow. It's no coincidence that when you have great kids, success follows."

The Maroon and White found itself with an uncharacteristic five-point lead at halftime and the team outrebounded Ohio State. But it was the team's failure to defend the frontcourt against the Buckeyes and make open shots that led to its final loss.



In fact that rebounding edge (49-37) allowed UMass to disguise its poor shooting performance. Senior forward Gary Forbes struggled through a 6-for-21 night, including seven missed 3-point attempts. Junior point guard Chris Lowe shot an abysmal 1-for-12 despite registering 10 assists.

The scoring ability of sophomore guard Ricky Harris kept UMass within reach during the second half. He led all scorers with 27 points and earned himself a spot on the NIT All-Tournament team along with senior center Dante Milligan and Forbes.

Though both teams made the same number of field goals, it took UMass 30 more attempts to reach that figure. Without the Maroon and White's 30 offensive rebounds, the margin of victory would have been much greater for Ohio State.

"Our plan was to let UMass get every offensive rebound and just guard them the second time," Ohio State coach Thad Matta said in jest after the game.

See BASKETBALL on page 8

The Minutemen failed to make the NCAA tournament for the 10th consecutive year but still played deep into the postseason with second-half comebacks against Akron, Syracuse and Florida before falling to Ohio State in the NIT Championship.

UM rallies for 3rd straight NIT victory

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

(Editor's note: This story was originally published on April 2, 2008.)

NEW YORK — At some point, the Massachusetts men's basketball team should consider playing well in the first half, not just the second.

But so far that's all that seems to work for the Minutemen.

Trailing once again by double digits, UMass came storming back in the second half to defeat two-time defending NCAA Champion Florida, 78-66, in the semifinals of the National Invitation Tournament at Madison Square Garden last night.

After another poor shooting performance in the first half for the Minutemen, seniors — and New York natives — Dante Milligan and Gary Forbes sparked an 18-4 run that put UMass ahead, 59-51, with just over seven minutes remaining. Missed foul shots by the Gators and two key and impressive baskets by Forbes were more than enough for UMass to secure the win.

"These guys showed a lot of heart and integrity and believed in each other," UMass coach Travis Ford said after the game. "We've shown in our previous games that we've figured a way out to come back. And the reason we come back is that these guys have that never-say-die attitude."

The third straight comeback victory for the Minutemen (25-10) sets up an NIT final matchup with Ohio State — last year's NCAA Tournament

See NIT on page 8

Sophomore Mark DeSantis and the Minutemen qualified for their second NCAA tournament and advanced to their first ever College Cup before losing 1-0 to Ohio State in the semifinals.

Run to College Cup ends against Ohio St.

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

(Editor's note: This story was originally published on Dec. 14, 2007.)

CARY, N.C. – It's easy to be gracious in victory.

But even after finding itself on the wrong end of a 1-0 decision in Friday night's national semifinal game against Ohio State, the Massachusetts men's soccer team displayed the demeanor that made them the sentimental choice in the 2007 NCAA Men's College Cup.

"This wasn't the time we wanted to be sitting here, we wanted to be practicing [Saturday]," UMass coach Sam Koch said. "My hat goes off to Ohio State. They were big. They were strong. They were fast.

"But my hat goes off to my team. Every coach that sits up here in the final four is certainly very proud of what the players do and how they perform. I'm extremely proud of them for what they do off the field, as well as on the field. I'm a very happy person to be able to coach them. This has been a special time."

The Minutemen withstood the OSU attack in the first half thanks to redshirt goalkeeper Zack Simmons. Aside from his three saves in the opening period, he gave the Buckeye forwards very little to work with, cutting down angles and ruling the air around his penalty area.

But UMass could only hold the Buckeyes off for so long. In the 53rd minute, Eric Edwards slammed a rebound into the net to give the Buckeyes the only goal they needed.

Danny Irizarry fed a ball through the right side of the UMass defense to leading-scorer Xavier Balc. Sophomore back Dan Lepone held him off to prevent a breakaway, but Balc got a hard shot off anyway. Simmons deflected the initial shot, but Roger Espinoza promptly lined a second attempt at the UMass goalkeeper. Again, Simmons deflected it before Edwards flew through the box and sent it high into the UMass goal.

Senior Kenny Cook and redshirt junior Doug Rappaport were in the area but couldn't get the ball to safety.

"Eric Edwards scored a nice goal on a rebound. It wasn't a real clean goal. It was a rebound and a knockdown, but he slammed it in, and that gave us the one we needed," OSU coach John Bluem said. "We were fairly confident that we could shut them down after that."

The performances of Simmons and the UMass backfield drew praise from the Buckeyes.

"It was a tough game, and we knew it would be a low-scoring game because both teams have great defenses," Balc said. "We were lucky to get on the good end of one."

The Minutemen forced chances after Edwards' goal, but couldn't capitalize. Ben Arikian lined a corner kick into the box, OSU goalkeeper Casey Latchem fisted it away from the goal. UMass freshman Stuart Amick caught it on the volley and lined it toward the net. The high corner was open, but the shot sailed over the cross bar.

Lepone had a similar chance late off a clearance from a throw-in. But his right-footed attempt from 25 yards flew well over the net. Rappaport also had a chance after a set piece, but his shot from the top of the penalty area fell harmlessly into the arms of goalkeeper Casey Latchem.

The Buckeyes relied on their backfield, led by senior Eric Brunner, to uphold their lead. UMass looked to create offense f set pieces, corner kicks especially, to manufacture scoring chances throughout the tournament. OSU gave them all the opportunities to capitalize.

"We had our chances. We definitely played better and put more pressure on them," Cook said. "But maybe it was Ohio State taking their foot off the gas a little bit."

After scoring, Bluem shifted his alignment. Edwards came off after scoring and the Buckeyes sat back to limit the space UMass had in its offensive third. The Minutemen out-shot the Buckeyes, 6-5, in the second half.

Lepone and freshman Ben Arikian earned yellow cards for some questionable tackles. The Buckeyes targeted Arikian late in game. After he took Balc down, a OSU player charged at him while moving the ball forward and shoved him to the ground.

UMass's run to the College Cup brought the program to heights Koch and his players didn't realistically expect when the season began. Despite the loss, Cook believes it was a perfect ending to his career in Amherst.

"Maybe I'd like to go one more game," an emotional Cook said. "But this has been an unbelievable run. There's not one thing I would change about this season. I couldn't be prouder of a group of guys."

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com

Balise nets 4 in upset over the Pride

UMass drops No. 15 Hofstra in season opener at Garber

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

(Editor's note: This story was originally published on Feb. 25, 2008.)

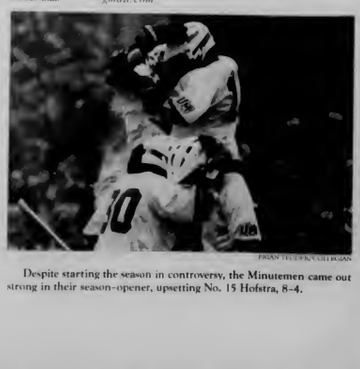
Senior Fred Federico's third-quarter goal made it perfectly clear that, despite the current controversy surrounding the No. 20 Massachusetts men's lacrosse team, the 2008 season opener belonged to the Minutemen.

Federico's score followed two quick goals from Hofstra's Kevin Ford to cut UMass's lead to 5-3 and bring the Pride (0-1) back into the game.

Junior goalkeeper Doc Schneider made 18 saves, and junior attack Tim Balise scored four goals as the Minutemen (1-0) defeated No. 15 Hofstra, 8-4, Saturday afternoon at Garber Field.

"Every win is a big win. We scratched out a win today. Against the teams that we play, they are all big wins," UMass coach Greg Cannella said.

"I'm pleased with our effort. We had real good focus throughout the first half. I thought we got a little out of control there in the second half. Maybe we were a little tired, I'm not sure. But we're doing our best."



Neither team dominated possession in the first half, but the Minutemen were more successful in creating scoring chances. The game's first goal, a turn-around shot over the shoulder of Hofstra goalkeeper Danny Orlando from Balise, was born from the aggressive play of sophomore Bobby Hayes.

Hayes scooped up a loose ball and quickly found Balise alone to the right of Orlando.

Another turnover led to the second UMass goal, the first of freshman Peter McNichols' career. McNichols and Ryan Hantverk were featured heavily in the UMass offensive rotation in their first-career games.

"These guys have been in

See LACROSSE on page 8

Despite starting the season in controversy, the Minutemen came out strong in their season-opener, upsetting No. 15 Hofstra, 8-4.